Truman Sees Prosperity Setting New Marks in '49

Need Cited of Million More Jobs, 3-4% Production Rise In 'Testing' Year

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

President Truman yesterday told Congress that although 1949 will be "a period of harder tests" he was confident that "prosperity can be continued" with new job and production records for 1949.

"Maximum employment in 1949," he said in his annual Economic Report, "means that nearly one million additional job opportunities should be provided for the growing labor force.

"Maximum production means that our increased labor force and modernized plant should strive for a 3 to 4 per cent increase in the total output.

"Maximum purchasing power means that the sum total of market demand . . . should be proportionate to our productive capacity.

"It must not be more or we shall suffer inflation. It must not be less or we shall suffer unemployment and under-utilization of our resources.

Welcomes Price Declines

He warned against two dangers. "We must work together," he said, "to combat the remaining dangers of postwar inflation . . . and at the same time to build strong bulwarks against deflation and depression."

In some fields, he said, prices have started to go down as supply has caught up with demand. Such gradual declines, he said, "are to be welcomed rather than feared."

At the same time, he said, such price drops have not gone far enough to justify ceasing to worry about inflation.

Both price declines and inflation can be at work at the same time or in rapid sequence, he said. Therefore, he declared, "we need to have available a range of governmental measures which can be applied as brake or as accelerator according to the need."

Lists Economy Regulators

These measures he listed as:

1. Standby price, wage and distribution controls.
2. Higher, but "flexible" taxes.
3. Continued rent and bank and consumer credit controls.
4. A wide program of social welfare projects.

In one chapter titled "Legislative Recommendations" Mr. Truman repeated all his suggestions in his recent State of the Union message, but in more detailed form. These he listed under three headings as follows:

1. "Policies to Combat Inflation and to Promote Production in Certain Industries."

First under this heading, he asked for increases in taxes of four billion dollars. "It is essential to sound fiscal policy to have a budget surplus now," he said. "This is our most effective weapon against inflation."

For Higher Inheritance Taxes

The principal source of additional revenue, he said, should be taxes upon corporate incomes. Another would be taxes upon estates and gifts. Individual income taxes in upper and middle brackets should be studied.

Next, he asked for an increase in payroll taxes for social security and for "existing and extended social insurance programs."

He recommended continued maintenance of the Government bond market. He asked continuation of authority for the Federal Reserve System to increase reserve requirements of member banks—and added that nonmember banks insured under the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation should be included.

He asked continuation of restrictions on installment credits. He reiterated his request for funds to increase the production capacity of certain critical industries, such as steel, where present

Called Stolen Weapon 'Salesman'

D. C. Man Charged by FBI As 'Contact' in Gun-Running

Joseph B. Walling, 52, who once operated the Trojan Club, a plush Washington gambling place, was arrested here yesterday by the FBI as a member of a ring which recently looted a Government arsenal.

The FBI said Walling was the "contact man" who arranged the sale of machineguns, M-1 carbines and bazookas stolen from the Raritan, N. J., Arsenal to the Costa Rican government.

Walling, who lives at 1413 Girard st. nw., is the twelfth and last member of the ring to be arrested, the FBI announced.

A complaint against Walling was filed yesterday in Newark. A short time later he was asked to appear at the local FBI office. There, the FBI said, he made a statement admitting his implication in the arsenal looting and was arrested.

According to the FBI, Walling, who has a son and a daughter, identified himself as the factory representative of an air-conditioning firm and said he is also a "finder" who locates scarce equipment and buyers.

The FBI said Walling admitted selling 138 stolen guns to the Costa Rican government and signing the name "James Cassidy" to the bill of sale. They said he posed as owner of the guns in the transaction.

After his arrest, Walling was arraigned before U. S. Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence on a charge of stealing Government property. Lawrence set bond of $2500 and continued the hearing until January 27. Unable to make bond, Walling was taken to the District Jail.

3 on Plane Feared Lost In Volcano

Hawaiian Villages Menaced by Lava From Mauna Loa's Violent Eruption

Honolulu, Jan. 7 (U.P.).—A plane carrying three persons disappeared today on a sightseeing flight near Mauna Loa, the erupting volcano.

The plane, a Stinson, was reported last seen this morning as it flew into clouds at the 9000-foot level near the volcano.

Authorities considered the possibility the plane might have crashed into the volcano. The pilot was James Redman. With him was Frank Lee, also of Honolulu and an unidentified passenger.

Another sightseeing plane, a Piper Cub, made a landing on an emergency airstrip on the volcano's lava-scarred slopes.

Hilo police identified the pilot of the Cub as Fred Rankle. His passenger, a commercial photographer, was unidentified. Police said the two men were uninjured and walked to a nearby airport for fuel.

One of Biggest Eruptions

One of the biggest eruptions since the mountain's top blew off in 1914, cracked the famed Mauna Loa crater today. It hurled a river of lava down the slope to threaten small villages on the west coast of the island of Hawaii.

Another eruption on the big island can be expected "at almost any time" form Mount Kilauea, the "Firepit," on Mauna Loa's flank, Dr. Thomas A. Jaggar, world famed volcanologist, said.

Jaggar said "it may be hours, days or months" but "something is due to pop" in Kilauea, which has an almost perfectly round crater two miles wide that is described as a "plug" over the bowels of the volcanic region underlying that section of Hawaii.

Mauna Loa split in an orgy of volcanic pyrotechnics seldom equaled in its four-year cycle of eruptions. The 2½-mile cone spewed forth molten rock all night long through a 3-mile crack in its southwest wall and sent a towering cloud of smoke and powdery cinders 15,000 feet into the air.

The pall of smoke could be seen 200 miles away by fliers and the glow from the crater was visible for nearly 100 miles in the night sky.

20-Mile River of Lava

Three separate streams of glowing, clinker-like cinders and liquid rock converged in a river that flowed 20 miles from the bubbling crater before it finally slowed to a three-mile-an-hour pace and gave evidence of stopping altogether as the rock cooled and stiffened.

At that time the main stream was within six miles, of several villages.

No evacuations were reported and residents were said to be calm. In the last eruption in 1942, the Air Force bombed the lava front to divert it from populated areas.

Another and similar stream of lava spurted out of the eastern rim of the 13,680-foot crater where the 5-mile-long crack east and west across the cone had opened a minor fissure. It was not believed dangerous. It had flowed five miles down the mountainside in the direction of Hilo, the island's major city of 30,000 population on the northeast coast.

Secretary of State Marshall To Quit Inauguration Day; Dean Acheson to Succeed Him

No Abrupt Change In Basic Foreign Policy Foreseen as Result of Switch

By Ferdinand Kuhn, jr.
Post Reporter

The conduct of American foreign policy was expected to get a blood transfusion of new vigor and new resourcefulness from Dean Acheson as Secretary of State.

No abrupt changes were foreseen in the basic American policy of building up western Europe and resisting Soviet penetration.

"I will, of course, do my best to carry out the President's policies," Acheson said yesterday in his public statement after his appointment was made known.

Advised Greek Policy

Acheson himself was an architect of those policies when, as Undersecretary, he advised the President to sponsor emergency help to Greece and Turkey, and when he helped conceive the vast project known as the Marshall Plan.

Publicly and privately Acheson has said dozens of times that there is no quick and easy solution of the present struggle with Russia. He knows it will go on for many years in one form or another.

He also has told friends that it is foolish to try to "push and prod" western Europeans into changing centuries-old habits overnight; that there is no speedy route to western European unity, and that it will take at least 10 years and probably longer to make non-Soviet Europe truly self-sustaining.

He's "Stay-at-Home"

But Acheson does not believe in the diplomacy of stalemate. Those who know him well say he will bring to the State Department an imagination that thinks constantly of new ways to reach unchanging objectives. In this sense there may be changes in tactics in American dealings with Russia and in other fields of foreign policy.

One of these changes will come from Acheson's emphatic belief that the place for a Secretary of State is here in Washington and not at endless and exhausting internatoinal conferences abroad.

He made no secret of his belief in former years that Secretaries Byrnes and Marshall spent too many months out of the country in unnecessary attendance at conferences. Acheson will go only when other nations send their foreign ministers.

He will be inclined to send his new Undersecretary, Budget Director James E. Webb to represent the United States if Russia, for example, sends Deputy Foreign Minister Andrei Vishinsky.

Webb Knows ERP

Webb has had no experience in the State Department, but as Budget Director he has had to absorb a vast amount of background knowledge of foreign problems. He took a direct and personal part in the formulation of the European Recovery Program.

For the past four months Webb has been studying the whole field of American commitments abroad and the outlook abroad before

COLD WAR STRATEGIST—Dean Acheson, named to succeed Gen. George Marshall as Secretary of State, shares the President's foreign policy views

Lovett to Resign, With His Post as Undersecretary Going to Webb

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

President Truman, a note of sadness in his voice, announced yesterday that Gen. George C. Marshall would resign on Inauguration Day as Secretary of State because of failing health. He said that the noted soldier-statesman would be succeeded by Dean Acheson.

Mr. Truman emphasized that the change presaged no shift in American foreign policy.

He did this with a slashing repudiation of an article in Life magazine by Jay Franklin, a Washington newspaper columnist, who helped write speeches on the Truman Campaign Special. Franklin's piece said that the President was determined to wave an olive branch at Premier Stalin, but was under pressure from men in the Cabinet who wanted "bad" relations with Russia.

Webb to Succeed Lovett

The departure of General Marshall from the State Department on January 20, Mr. Truman said, would result in these other changes:

Undersecretary of State Robert A. Lovett will resign on the same day, and will be succeeded by Budget Director James E. Webb.

Frank Pace, jr., now assistant director of the Budget Bureau, will succeed Webb as director. Frederick J. Lawton will move up as assistant director.

Secretary of State-to-be Acheson has had some foes in the Senate in the past, but there was no doubt that his nomination would be quickly confirmed.

Is 13 Years Younger

Acheson, who at 55 is 13 years younger than the ailing General Marshall, served in the State Department for six years, first as Assistant Secretary and then as Undersecretary. He resigned on July 1, 1947, to return to a profitable law practice, and received praise from President Truman for having stayed on in the Government at "great financial sacrifice."

As Secretary of State, he will receive $15,000 a year—$25,000 if Congress passes the bill to raise Cabinet salaries.

Kidney Removed Last Month

General Marshall, after putting it off in order to pursue his official duties, underwent an operation at Walter Reed Hospital early last month for the removal of a kidney.

Mr. Truman was hopeful at the time that Marshall would be able to return to the State Department. Apparently, however, the reports on Marshall's condition were none too encouraging.

"I am unwilling . . ." said Mr. Truman, in a letter accepting Marshall's resignation, "to assume the responsibility of further jeopardizing your health."

The Chief Executive's admiration and affection for his No. 1 Cabinet officer were written on his face when he made the announcement of Marshall's resignation at a White House news conference.

Back in the war years, Mr. Truman went to Marshall, then Chief of Staff of the Army, and said he wanted to get into uniform. Marshall asked him his age and then told him he could best serve by staying in the United States Senate.

Asked to Go to China

Mr. Truman was President when he next asked a favor of Marshall. The date was November 27, 1945, and the famous soldier was preparing to enjoy a well-earned retirement at his home in Leesburg, Va. But Patrick J. Hurley, with an angry blast, had just resigned as a special envoy to China.

President Truman called Marshall on the telephone at Leesburg and asked him if he would go to China in Hurley's place.

The war-weary general simply said, "Yes, sir." This assignment led eventually to Marshall's appointment as Secretary of State, a role in which he became a world figure.

The Chief Executive was reading the letters exchanged between himself and Marshall yesterday. When he came to that part of his own letter dealing with the general's service as Chief of Staff, he looked up and remarked:

"I have said it many times, that I think General Marshall is the

Rocket Plane Sets Climb Speed Mark

Air Force's Bell X-1 Zooms to 23,000 Feet In Minute, 40 Seconds

By The Associated Press

The Air Force's "faster than sound" plane, the rocket-powered Bell X-1, has taken off under its own power for the first time, the Air Force disclosed yesterday.

The tiny plane reached an altitude of 23,000 feet in one minute, 40 seconds, it was announced.

This rate of climb exceeds previous records, but the Air Force said no official claim will be made.

The flight took place at the Muroc Air Force Base in California, January 3. Capt. Charles E. Yeager, the first pilot to exceed the speed of sound in the plane was at the controls.

Exceeds 13,000 Feet a Minute

The X-1 averaged a rate of climb of more than 13,000 feet a minute in this test. The Air Force said a propeller plane of fighter type can rise about 6000 feet a minute. Jet fighters, like the Shooting Star, can climb 8000 feet the first minute and 10,000 the second.

Although originally designed for conventional ground takeoff, the X-1 heretofore had been carried to an altitude of about 20,000 feet by a B-29 Superfortress and then released.

The main reason for the mid-air launching was to utilize all of the little plane's fuel capacity.

The X-1 burns a mixture of ethyl alcohol and liquid oxygen. It can fly 2½ minutes at full power or for 10 minutes if the four rocket units are used one at a time.

No Modifications Made

No modifications were made in the plane nor was any auxiliary power source used in the first ground takeoff. The X-1 remained aloft for about eight minutes. The powered portion of the flight was less than two minutes.

All four rocket motors were used during the takeoff which required a run of 2300 feet.

The report mentioned specifically that the X-1 has "own "hundreds of miles" faster than sound, a fact previously disclosed in less formal manner. Sound travels 760 miles an hour at sea level.

U. N., Israel Open Parley On Armistice

(From Press Dispatches)

Tel Aviv, Israel, Jan. 7.—Preliminary armistice talks between United Nations and Israeli officials opened here today as major fighting sputtered to a halt under terms of the 2 p. m. (7 p. m. EST) cease-fire agreement.

U. N. headquarters at Haifa and the Egyptian government in Cairo announced that firing had halted at deadline, but an Israeli spokesman said some fighting continued near Rafa, just inside the Egyptian frontier. It was hoped this would prove to be a purely local incident which would not interfere with armistice negotiations.

(At Lake Success, N. Y., Palestine Mediator Ralph J. Bunche proposed that Israel and Egypt begin their armistice in the Island of Rhodes by Wednesday. U. N. area headquarters are in Rhodes. He awaited official replies by Israel and Egypt to his proposal.

(Bunche noted that Egypt had not agreed to negotiate with the Israeli government as such, but with "Jewish authorities." The negotiation will cover two Security Council orders calling for the Jews to withdraw from seized areas in the Negev and for the Jews and Arabs to negotiate a complete armistice.)

An official Cairo foreign office spokesman said tonight that Egypt accepted the cease-fire order when the United States Government gave assurances the Jews would henceforth submit to orders of the Security Council.

The assurances, the spokesman said, were given by American Charge d'Affaires Jefferson Patterson.

Both the Jews and the Egyptians claimed victory in the lat-

Britain Acts to Guard Trans-Jordan Interests

Kyrenia, Cyprus, Jan. 7 (AP).—Britain in the last four days has taken positive military steps to safeguard what it considers its vital interests in the Trans-Jordan part of the world.

Acting after reported Jewish penetration of Egypt, the royal air force has started fighter reconnaissance patrols over Trans-Jordan within view of the Southern Palestine battle area.

It also has begun enlarging its reserve of military supplies with ammunition flown in from bases in Egypt to Marrak and Aqaba, Trans-Jordan.

To Cooperate With Acheson

Leaders of Western Europe Regret Marshall Retirement

London, Jan. 7 (AP).—Western European leaders today expressed regret at the retirement of Secretary of State George C. Marshall and promised cooperation with his successor, Dean Acheson.

Britain's Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin said Marshall "may be assured we shall not rest" until the European Recovery Program—known as the Marshall Plan—is "brought to complete fruition."

Bevin added in an official statement that Acheson "is no stranger to us and he, too, may be assured of our continued cooperation." Of Marshall, Bevin said: "This great American, who did as much as any one man to win the war, has since devoted his whole efforts to restoring the wrecked economy of Europe and to establishing firm foundations for world peace."

He referred to Marshall as "one of the great United States Secretaries of State."

Held Friend of Britain

High British government officials privately said Acheson was considered a "friend of Britain."

Western Europe generally received the news of U. S. State Department changes with the hope that there would be no fundamental shift in American foreign policy.

French officials said they regretted Marshall's illness. They expressed surprise that W. Averell Harriman, roving ambassador for the ERP or Chief Justice Fred Vinson had not been appointed to succeed him.

Italian Premier Alcide de Gasperi said Marshall's resignation will have no effect on the carrying out of present policies. De Gasperi said he remembered well the "friendliness and good will toward Italy" shown by Acheson in the past.

The Czech radio broadcast the commentary of the left wing agency Telepress that Acheson was a personal friend of President Truman and probably could not be "reached" by "warmongers."

The Soviet-sponsored Radio Berlin had "no comment" on the changes, but there was regret in

House Keeps Foreign Policy Group Lineup

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

House Democratic leaders decided yesterday to make no change in the present 14-to-11 party division on the House Foreign Affairs Committee and received "bipartisan" plaudits from Republicans in return.

House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin (R., Mass) called it "a continuation of the spirit of bipartisan foreign policy."

Representative Walter H. Judd (Minn.), a GOP member of the group said: "Very good. It is recognition by the Democrat. that they made a tactical mistake in the Senate."

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.) led a storm of GOP protest against the Senate Democratic leadership decision early this week to tighten Democratic control of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, with an 8 to 5 party ratio.

Martin Is Gratified

Preserving the 14-to-11 division of the House group Republicans set two years ago, but with Democrats in the majority, the House leadership decision discards an earlier move to raise the Democratic margin by 2.

"It was a very proper thing to do," commented former Speaker Martin. "I contended, and they did not dispute, that if bipartisanship in foreign affairs is to continue, we should continue the same ratios.

High Court 'Peephole' Decision Is Invoked in 3 Gaming Cases

By Joseph Paull
Post Reporter

Accused gamblers invoked the recent "transom-peeking" decision of the Supreme Court yesterday in attempts to escape trial in District Court.

One case was thrown out under the decision. In the second, the defendants were ordered to stand trial. The third was taken under advisement.

In the "transom-peeking" case, the Supreme Court castigated policemen here who used illegal methods to seek arrests in numbers cases. They urged the officers to obtain warrants where emergencies were not present and cautioned against violating the privacy of an individual's home.

Dismissed yesterday were numbers-lottery charges against Schuyler Wilson, 29, and Walter S. Lephew, 43, both of 2655 41st st. nw.

Detective Sergt. James Roche testified that Lephew had been observed leaving various places with brown paper bags, which are used extensively by pickup men in the numbers racket. Roche said Lephew was followed to the 41st st. address.

The detective admitted that he was "listening" at the keyhole of the Wilson apartment when the door suddenly opened. He said that he identified himself but that the door was slammed. Roche said he then kicked in the door.

"This case comes clearly under the Supreme Court decision," Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut said in throwing out the case.

However, he upheld similar charges against Max Schwartz, 54, of 2151 California st. nw., and Louis W. Dove, 40, of 1796 Columbia rd. nw.

Here, Roche said, an undercover agent was stationed in a "cove" under Schwartz's apartment in an areaway, and heard numbers and horserace bets being taken. The observations were made for five days, he said.

On the last day, according to Roche, the undercover man heard someone in the apartment say, "Louie, there are two strange men lurking around downstairs." Then, Roche said, the apartment door was kicked in and the raid made.

Judge Schweinhaut said this case was obviously well made.

"It strikes me," said the judge, "that in one case the officer moved too soon. In the other, he almost waited too long."

The quarry might have escaped if the arrest had been further delayed, the judge said.

Taken under advisement by Judge Edward M. Curran was the case resulting from a raid September 30 on a room at 910 Kent st. ne., according to Assistant United States Attorney Arthur McLaughlin.

Police were armed with a warrant for the arrest of Ralph W. McKnight, 35, of 836 Division ave.

Federal Court Holds Alabama Voter Qualification Law Void

Mobile, Ala., Jan. 7 (AP).—White supremacy advocates lost a major round today in their fight to restrict Negro voting in the South.

A three-judge Federal court held unconstitutional Alabama's 2-year-old voter qualification law, the Boswell amendment. The amendment required registrants for voting to be able to "understand and explain" the United States Constitution.

The court said it "clearly appears that this amendment was intended to be and is being used for the purpose of discriminating against applicants for the franchise on the basis of race or color."

The defendant Mobile County Board of Registrars was permanently enjoined from enforcing the amendment "in determining the qualification of any citizen who applies for registration as an elector."

Whether the ruling will be appealed to the United States Supreme Court was undecided.

Invalidation of the Boswell amendment restored Alabama's 48-year-old voting requirement that registrants must own $300 worth of property and be able to read the United States Constitution.

Ten Negroes who brought the suit contended the wide discretion that the amendment granted to

After 50-Year Search

Microscope Finally Spots Heredity-Carrying Genes

Los Angeles, Jan. 7 (AP).—Two University of Southern California scientists announced today that genes—the tiny carriers of heredity in all living things—have been seen under an electron microscope for the first time.

The announcement said the accomplishment is the culmination of 50 years of research by scientists in all parts of the world.

Dr. Daniel C. Pease, assitant professor of anatomy, and Dr. Richard F. Baker, assistant professor of experimental medicine, reported they obtained pictures of genes of fruit flies.

They said the genes are spindle-shaped particles about 1/100,000th of a centimeter long and 1/1,000,000th of a centimeter wide. A centimeter is one-half inch. The researchers said the gene is much smaller than the wave length of visible light.

The statement said genes, which determine such hereditary traits for humans as height, weight, color of hair and eyes, were only a theoretical concept until they were seen under the electron microscope.

"The ability to see genes, along with disease-carrying viruses which have already been isolated, is expected to speed biological and medical research," the announcement said.

Pace Appointment to Budget Bureau Post Fulfills Predictions of Many About Him

The fast pace and friendly face of Frank Pace, jr., new director of the Budget Bureau, yesterday carried the 36-year-old Ozarks boy high up on the ladder of Government service—onto a rung near the very top.

The lank, limber Arkansan has been marked as a "bright young man" ever since he came to Washington during the war while serving with the Air Transport Command. Folk who met the personable attorney told one another that there was a young man definitely going places. President Truman yesterday made the collective prediction come true.

Back home in Little Rock, big things were long ago prophesied for the 6-foot son of Frank Pace, sr., prominent Arkansas attorney, one-time law partner of the famed Governor and Senator, Jeff Davis.

The rugged son of mountain pioneers finished high school at 14, polished up at a prep, whizzed through Princeton, strolled through Harvard Law, and came home with his degrees in '36. During the next six years Frank served a sort of apprenticeship—in the district attorney's office, in the State revenue department, and in private practice with his dad. The junior Pace spent four years in uniform, returning to civilian life in '46 as a major.

Caught Hannegan's Eye

Frank went to work with the United States Attorney General's Office as a special assistant, but not for long. His vivacious personality, genial chuckle, and real ability had caught the eye of Postmaster General Frank Hannegan, who appointed the Arkansawyer as his executive assistant.

Two years later—January of 1948—Pace stepped up a pace as assistant director of the budget under Jim Webb, another young blood. In the 12 succeeding months, Frank Pace gave up to a large extent two of his great affections: people and golf.

It's been said that Pace the younger knows every person in Washington claiming Arkansas as his home or birthplace. He likes people and people like him. He makes friends easily, often influential friends, like Secretary of Treasury John Snyder, presidential assistant John Steelman, presidential confidant Les Biffle, to name a few who happen to be from the Ozark country.

As to golf, Pace was a pacesetter who could make 18 holes in the low seventies. The past two years in a row he captured the National Press Club crown. He was awarded an Oscar last year for his low score in the National Celebrities' Golf Tournament, sponsored by The Washington Post.

Burned Midnight Candle

Frank Pace never did lose that easy-breaking smile of his, but he did virtually give up making new friends and influencing new golf balls in his last year with the Budget Bureau. The Arkansas lawyer burned the candle many a night mastering the million and one details that go in preparing the proposed spending of Uncle Sam's billions.

At Princeton, Frank was kind of puny—he stretched out to 6 foot—later. He liked sports, but failed to make a first team. He loved a blond Pennsylvania beauty named Peggy Jane. He made first team with her. Today they live in a brick house at 5126 Albemarle st., nw., with two young daughters, one flaxen-haired liked her mother, one dark-haired like her father.

Three weeks ago, while working late into the night on the budget the President will send to Congress Monday, Frank felt a sharp pain in his abdomen. He went home feeling bad. By morning he felt worse. He was rushed to the hospital and nuderwent an emer- have to go back to the eight-hour day.

So now Pace has to slow up his pace for a while. Looks like he'll western Germany at the departure of Marshall.

Hans Richter, head of trade unions in the state of Hesse, said he hoped Marshall's resignation "will not mean a loss of aid for Germany."

A spokesman for the Conservative Democratic Party said "Marshall's memory will live in the hearts of millions of Europeans whom he saved."

"Marshall had a great knowledge of and good will toward Germany and thus we are sorry to see him go," said a spokesman for Germany's Labor Party, the Soviet Democrats, in Hannover.

He expressed hope that Acheson "recognizes the possibilities Germany offers for the reconstruction of Europe and that his point of view will be as objective as Mr. Marshall's."

The Soviet-licensed newspaper Der Morgen in Berlin, said Marshall's resignation was no surprise because, the paper said, he had believed Thomas E. Dewey, the Republican candidate, would be the winner in last November's presidential election, and had split with President Truman over Vinson's once-projected mission to Moscow.

The retiring Undersecretary of State, Robert Lovett, also was a "victim of his wrong speculation over the presidential outcome," the paper continued.

Whether Acheson continues" the policy of the generals," it added, will be seen in the developments on the projected North Atlantic pact.

Selection of Acheson Pleases U. N. Leaders

Lake Success, Jan. 7 (AP).—Selection of Dean Acheson as Secretary of State was greeted with approval today by United Nations leaders. They said this meant no change in United States support of United Nations.

Russian Delegate Jakob A. Malik showed interest in the shift, but had no comment.

One high United Nations official appeared bewildered when he heard of Acheson's selection as Secretary of State.

"Acheson? Well, I'll be darned," he said.

Acheson is known here among U. N. officials and delegates as "pro-United Nations."

It was recalled that Acheson was Undersecretary of State in the formative days of the U. N. and that he had a hand in helping shape the organization.

Delegates interested in the atomic energy problem pointed out he helped write the Acheson-Lilienthal report, which formed a large part of the United States plan for world atomic control put before the U. N. Atomic Energy Commission in 1946 by Bernard M. Baruch. David Lilienthal, chairman of the United States Atomic Energy Commission, collaborated with Acheson in writing that report.

John Foster Dulles, Republican Party foreign affairs adviser who was named acting chairman of the U. S. delegation at the Paris Assembly after Secretary Marshall returned to Washington in November, said in a statement in New York he regretted Marshall's resignation. But since it had to be, Dulles said he was glad his successor would be one who demonstrated the capacity "to carry forward our foreign policy without interruption or vacillation."

Secretary General Trygve Lie sent messages to General Marshall and Acheson. In his telegram to Marshall, Lie said:

"As you relinquish your duties as Secretary of State I want to congratulate you upon the distinguished service that you have rendered to your country and to the world during your term of office."

In his telegram to Acheson. Lie said:

"Please accept my hearty congratulations upon your appointment as Secretary of State. I look forward to working with you in the many areas in which our respective responsibilities meet."

AFL Protests Rumored Labor Dept. Promotion

By The Associated Press

The prospect that John W. Gibson, a CIO man, might be appointed Undersecretary of Labor stirred AFL protests last night.

Gibson is now an Assistant Secretary of Labor. During President Truman's election campaign he conducted a Midwest speaking tour for the President.

Learning of the possibility of Gibson's promotion the AFL, it was learned, has filed protests with both the White House and with Tobin. The AFL feels this would give the CIO an upper hand in the Labor Department.

At present, the two major labor organizations are equally represented on Tobin's staff with assistant secretaries. Gibson is the CIO man and Ralph Wright, a New York printer's union official, represents the AFL.

The function of a Labor Undersecretary is largely administrative. Since David L. Morse quit as Undersecretary in August to become director-general of the International Labor Organization, the post has been vacant.

outstanding man of that war period."

Unprecedented Praise

The tribute that Mr. Truman paid Marshall in his letter was unprecented in its all-out praise.

"Those of us who have had extensive experience in public affairs," he told Marshall, "know full well that there are very few indispensable men. Happily for the continuity of government, there appears from time to time a man of outstanding ability whose service in one post of responsibility gives him exceptional qualification to discharge other duties of equal moment in a quite different field of activity. You are the exemplification of the type of public servant I have in mind . . ."

Mr. Truman also was generous in his praise of Undersecretary of State Lovett. His words certainly exploded rumors that he was angry with the former Wall Street banker for some of his actions during the '48 campaign.

Earned Nation's Gratitude

He addressed him as "My Dear Bob." He told him that he had earned the gratitude of the Nation for his outstanding service, and he expressed the hope that he could call on him for advice and counsel in the future.

After Mr. Truman had made his announcements yesterday, a reporter asked what prompted him to name Budget Director Webb to succeed Lovett in the State Department.

The Chief Executive, reacting quickly, said it was because the 42-year-old Webb was a good man and a good administrator—that he was what was needed in the job of Undersecretary of State.

The next question was:

"Does Secretary Marshall's resignation presage any change in the foreign policy of the United States as indicated in an article by Jay Franklin in Life Magazine?"

Without Foundation of Fact

It did not, Mr. Truman said sharply. And that article, he added, was absolutely without foundation in fact in every instance and in every paragraph. That, he remarked was all he had to say about it.

"Did you have a close association with Mr. Franklin?" he was asked.

The President said that Franklin was one of the writers who helped prepare his speeches during the campaign, but he insisted that he had never had a private interview with him in his life. (Franklin, in his magazine article, had referred to his "private conversations" with Mr. Truman.)

"Mr. President," a reporter said, "can you say anything on the speculation that there has been a Forrestal-Marshall-Lovett foreign policy as compared with a Truman foreign policy?"

Mr. Truman said he understood that the reporter was referring to the Franklin article. He then repeated that the article was without foundation in fact.

The foreign policy, he continued, has been inaugurated by the President and carried out by the Secretary of State. He pointed out that this had been made clear in the exchange of letters between Marshall and himself.

In response to another question, Mr. Truman repeated that he had never had a private conference with Franklin. Then, amidst laughter, he recalled that Franklin had been in a time or two to see him about a job.

The Chief Executive said he didn't know who had enrolled Franklin among his speech writers, but supposed it was somebody on his staff.

Life Gives Explanation

In New York, Joseph J. Thorndike, jr., managing editor of Life, said, "Life presented this article as the views of someone who has been close to the President, just as in our November 15 issue we published Franklin's first-hand account of the inside strategy of the President's campaign. Our own reservations and disagreements with Mr. Franklin's views on President Truman's foreign policy were stated in our editorial note preceding the article."

Franklin himself did not attend the President's news conference. Later, he said he had no comment on the President's remarks.

No Plans for Immediate Future, Marshall Says

Pinehurst, N. C., Jan. 7 (AP).—Gen. George Marshall, who resigned today as Secretary of State, said at his home here that he has no plans for the immediate future.

The general said that a kidney operation performed at Washington last month has been "entirely successful." He disclosed that he had taken short walks in the past two days about his home, Liscombe Lodge. He said his doctors had told him it would be at least six weeks before the effects of the operation wore off.

General Marshall said he was pleased that Mrs. Marshall would get a respite from the pressure of the past 10 years. Mrs. Marshall was confined to her room with a cold and was unable to appear with her husband when photographs were made today.

General Marshall had no comment on foreign policy. He said he had been out of touch with facts relating to various issues since he entered Walter Reed Hospital at Washington in December. He said President Truman had been aware of his desire to resign ever since his return from a United Nations meeting in Paris.

Acheson Fits One's Picture Of a Diplomat

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

In demeanor, speech and dress, Dean Acheson meets the average man's idea of what a diplomat ought to be.

In private life he's just one of the boys, seeking relaxation in blue denim overalls and the argot of the "gandy dancer." This paradox he carries to its ultimate extreme by relishing (and recommending to his friends) an unhappy association of baked beans, raw cabbage and mayonnaise served as food.

Illuminating as these facts may be, they are superficial only. When Acheson takes office as Secretary of State January 20 he will bring to the great stone pile in Foggy Bottom much more than a crisp New England accent, impeccable attire and a sweeping red mustache.

Above everything else he will bring more than seven years of practice on an international stage where the United States has been script writer, director and star all at once.

Dean Acheson first entered the State Department in 1941 as an assistant secretary and immediately became an Administration spark-plug in promotion of aid to Great Britain and Russia. Throughout the war years and afterward he was in top spots in United States foreign relations.

In 1943 he headed the U. S. delegation to the first UNRRA conference at Atlantic City and held the same post in the second at Montreal in 1944. At the Bretton Woods conference in the latter year, he was a principal adviser to Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau.

As an UNRRA delegate, Acheson made friends for himself and for the United States throughout the world. He labored with much effect that an international precedent was set when the delegates of 44 nations agreed that no political party should be favored in furnishing relief.

Then, in September 1945, President Truman appointed him Undersecretary of State, a job which made him a sort of deputy Secretary and a practitioner on the highest levels of foreign policy. It was, in fact, as acting Secretary of State during Secretary Marshall's absence at the Moscow Conference in the spring of 1947 that he performed one of his most effective diplomatic operations.

Dean Acheson's surname is pronounced Atch-ison.

In March and April of that year he sold to a hostile and reluctant Republican Congress the Truman doctrine of financial and military aid to bolster Greek and Turkish resistance to Soviet encroachment. Acheson had returned to private life before Congress finally appropriated funds for the 332 million-dollar program in the late summer of 1947, but his clear and dispassionate appraisal of the dangers of inaction had laid its impermeable foundation.

Acheson came into Government service in 1933 from the law firm of Covington, Burling and Rublee. President Roosevelt appointed him to the new post of Undersecretary of the Treasury, a job he held just six months when he resigned in disagreement with Mr. Roosevelt over his dollar devaluation policy.

The son of an Episcopal Bishop, Acheson was born at Middletown, Conn., April 11, 1893, and although he had fixed upon law as his profession early in life, he took a youthful flyer at railroading. There he worked as a section hand ("gandy dancer" in the vernacular) and expended the energy in his 6 foot 1 inch frame for two dollars a day. As a mess sergeant in the National Guard he concocted his beans-cabbage-mayonnaise confection and gathered experience for service as an ensign in the Navy during World War I. He had taken his A. B. at Yale in 1915 and finished in law at Harvard in 1918.

As a star man of his class he was appointed secretary to the late Justice Louis D. Brandeis in 1919 and served there for two years before entering practice. After his resignation as Undersecretary of the Treasury, he returned to his former firm which became Covington, Burling, Rublee, Acheson and Schorb, and remained with it until 1949. During this period he was a leader in the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies.

As Assistant Secretary and Undersecretary of State, Acheson served under four Secretaries: Cordell Hull, Edward R. Stettinius, jr., James F. Byrnes and George C. Marshall. During this time his own attitude underwent a metamorphosis from all-out aid to Russia as a means of defeating Germany to immutable resistance to Russian aggression.

Figures in State Department Shifts

Webb Is Called 'Ball of Fire' at Any Task

James E. Webb, who has been chosen to be the new Undersecretary of State, began life as a North Carolinian, but has really become a Washingtonian. He worked his way through George Washington University Law School, he practiced law here, and he married a Washington girl.

Webb's loyalty to President Truman kept him in the $10,000-a-year job of Budget Bureau director when industry was seeking him at a figure variously reported at $40,000 to $75,000 a year. The President had plucked him from relative obscurity two years ago to make him Budget Director.

The following profile of him was published in The Washington Post's People in the News column last December 14:

"Jim Webb was an executive assistant to the late Undersecretary of the Treasury, O. Max Gardner, when elevated to the near-Cabinet position in July of '46. The President was sold on Webb as a high-speed, high-tension individual who thinks fast and acts fast. And so he is. No matter how onerous or painstaking his day's work, square-jawed Jimmy Webb always appears to be a ball of fire ready to blaze forth with new energy.

"A native of Granville County, N. C., where his father has been superintendent of schools for many years, Webb worked his way through the University of North Carolina. It took him five years to get his degree because he left school for one year to earn his tuition.

"Jim turned to law, but interrupted his training to serve two years in the Marine Corps air unit as a flier. Since, he has kept up an active interest in aviation developments, and in the Marine Corps Reserves.

"In '32, Jim became secretary to Representative Edward W. Pou (D., N. C.), chairman of the House Rules Committee, and studied law at George Washington University. His animated ability caught the eye of O. Max Gardner, former Governor of North Carolina, and he was asked to join Gardner's law firm here. Two years later, Webb passed the District bar exams.

"Another North Carolinian, Thomas Morgan, president of Sperry Gyroscope, then called on Webb's services in '36, and in the next seven years Webb rose to be secretary and treasurer of the corporation at a salary around twice his present pay.

"In '44, he went on active duty with the Ninth Marine Aircraft Wing, trained personnel in radar and electronics. He came out of the war a major.

"After the war, Webb reentered the law firm of Gardner, Morrison & Rogers here, and the following year, in March, 1946, went to the Treasury to serve with Undersecretary of the Treasury Gardner. He is now 42 years old.

"Jim married Miss Patsy Aiken Douglas, a Washington girl, in 1938. They have two children, Sally and Junior, and live in a two-story frame Colonial house at 3407 Rodman st. nw.

"He gave up flying some time ago, but still likes to work in the back yard, build bookcases at home, and fix the radiator. He enjoys working his hands, after a long day working with his head."

Truman Denies U. S. Plans Steel Mills

By James M. Minifie

President Truman denied yesterday that he planned to put the Government into the steel industry but hinted that if the necessary expansion was not forthcoming, the Government might have to build plants to be "integrated" with private industry.

He told a press conference that his message had recommended a study of the situation, with Government action to follow only if the industry itself were unwilling or unable to remedy the shortage of production capacity.

The industry is at present producing at a record capacity estimated at 96 million tons. Steelmen said, however, that any increase or even continuation of this rate would run head-on into a shortage of manganese, which is now becoming serious, with stockpiles at a critical low.

Russian Squeeze Denied

Manganese is to the steel industry what starch is to a laundry. A quality product cannot be turned out without it. It removes impurities such as oxygen and sulphur and gives steel much greater flexibility. About 14 pounds of manganese is used to a ton of steel. Estimated consumption in 1948 was 1,500,000 tons and the United States produced about 130,000 tons.

Russia has now become the chief source of this vital material. During the third quarter of 1948 the Soviets supplied 47 per cent of United States imports. Officials and representatives of industry here denied reports that the Russians were taking advantage of their key position by cutting off supplies of manganese.

They pointed out that over the year Russian deliveries had increased sharply, and that the movement of oreboats out of the Black Sea, where Russian manganese shipments originate, was normal. Interior Department and ECA officials declared that there was no information available to support rumors that the Russians were putting the squeeze on American industry.

Strategic Difficulties

They did, however, stress that the rise of the Soviets to the position of majority supplier of a vital commodity put them in an uncomfortably strong strategic position. They pointed out that in order to free the United States from this situation a double program would have to be undertaken; development of alternative foreign sources and exploitation of domestic sources even at higher prices.

An American source of manganese which was used during the war but closed afterwards owing to cost of production, will be restored next month when the Anaconda Copper Mining Co. begins production of ferro-manganese from the rhodochrosite ores at Butte, Mont.

This will be the largest ferro-manganese operation in the United States using domestic ores. Even so its production will be only 26,000 tons annually.

Testimony has been given before congressional committee that almost unlimited quantities of very low-grade native ores could be developed if price were not a factor.

J. Carson Adkerson, president of the American Manganese Producers Association, charged that Russia was deliberately dumping manganese into the United States, offering to undersell any domestic producer regardless of price, in order to prevent development of domestic deposits.

Suspicious

GOP Due To Oppose Acheson

Republican suspicions of Dean Acheson may cause a flurry of opposition when his name goes before the Senate for confirmation.

While Democratic leaders in Congress were enthusiastic about his appointment yesterday, most Republicans were cool or noncommittal. Privately there was a good deal of Republican grumbling which may take the form of public or under-cover sniping in the next two weeks.

Acheson's most vocal opponents at the Capitol were expected to be Senator Kenneth S. Wherry (R., Neb.) and Karl E. Mundt (R., S. D.). Wherry's antagonism is of long standing, and was voiced on the floor during debates on the European Recovery Program and the Vandenberg resolution of last summer.

Mundt's dislike springs from hearings of the House Committee on Un-American Activities when former Assistant Secretary Adolph A. Berle called Acheson the leader of a pro-Soviet faction in the State Department in 1944. Berle pictured Alger Hiss as Acheson's "principal assistant" in this group that allegedly opposed a "clean-cut showdown" with Russia.

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), minority leader of the Foreign Relations Committee, was in New York, where his wife underwent an operation, and he was not available for comment.

But other Republican members of the committee, Senators Lodge of Massachusetts, Hickenlooper of Iowa and Wiley of Wisconsin, declined to comment on the nomination. Wiley simply said the committee should make sure that Acheson weeds out "all leftist groups" in the State Department.

On the House side, former Chairman Charles A. Eaton (R., N. J.), of the Foreign Affairs Committee, thought Acheson "will make a good Secretary of State." His committee colleague John M. Vorys (R., Ohio), said he had a high personal regard for Acheson "but for the over-all shift the kindest thing I can say is that it looks like sending in the second team to replace the varsity in a very big game."

The most eminent Republican to praise Acheson's appointment was former President Herbert Hoover, who said Acheson would bring "outstanding ability" to the State Department. The new Secretary has been vice chairman of the Hoover Commission on the reorganization of the Government.

"Splendid Appointment"—Hull

Former Secretary Cordell Hull, with whom Acheson served as Assistant Secretary from 1941 to 1944, said the appointment would be "a splendid one from every viewp- - -"

On the Democratic side in Congress there was high praise for Acheson, who has been a loyal Democrat and one of the most effective State Department spokesmen ever to appear before congressional committees.

Senator Tom Connally (D., Tex.), chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, called him "a man of unusual ability and splendid background." Representative Sol Bloom (D., N. Y.), chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, predicted Acheson would make "a great Secretary of State," and thought the change from a military to a civilian Secreary of State should have good results.

House Speaker Sam Rayburn described Acheson as "one of the ablest men I have seen around Washington." Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D., Mass.), said Acheson was "one of the best men in the field of diplomacy I've ever known."

arrangement and I am highly gratified."

Party ratios on other key House committees were also determined, but not immediately disclosed. Reports are that Democratic control of the House Appropriations group will be increased by two, and that one Republicans place may be dropped on the House Labor Committee, which was formerly divided 15 to 10.

House Ways and Means Committee Democrats, sitting as a "committee on committees," meanwhile opened formal deliberations on Democratic committee assignments. These are not likely to be completed until late next week.

The group is expected to make a ruling barring chairmen of major House committees from sarving on another House unit. This would result in dropping Representative John Rankin (D., Miss.) from the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

The Senate Republican Committee on Committees meanwhile finished assigning the 42 Republican Senators to minority posts on Senate committees.

Senator Hugh Butler (R., Nebr.), chairman of the group, said all the assignments are tentative, however, until a conference of all Republican Senators acts on them Monday.

Warrington, England, Jan. 7 (AP). The wreckage of a missing United States Air Force C-54 cargo plane from the Berlin airlift was found tonight in northwest England.

Police said two bodies were recovered. The United States Air Force at Frankfurt said the plane is believed to have carried 17 or 18 military personnel. Six bodies were found. No names were released.

Connally Says

Cut Probable In 4⅓ Billion Aid Requests

Chairman Connally (D., Tex.) of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday said Marshall Plan requests for the year beginning July 1 "probably will be cut some."

A $4,374,000,000 figure was submitted to the United States by the nationsh taking part in the foreign aid program as the amount they will need for the 1950 fiscal year, and Economic Cooperation Administration officials say that sum will be used as a rough basis for a recommendation to Congress.

Connally said that this total "is not necessarily what we are going to give them." He said it probably will be cut, but he didn't say by how much.

The Texas lawmaker also noted that ECA is planning to ask for a reported $1,250,000,000 to keep supply lines to western Europe filled during April, May and June.

He said he thinks both requests will be put into a single bill, with hearings getting under way late this month or early in February.

The two ECA officials—Administrator Paul G. Hoffman and Ambassador W. Averell Harriman—probably will be invited to testify, Connally said.

The necessity for providing money for the April-June period arose when President Truman authorized Hoffman to spend in 12 months the $5,055,000,000 that Congress had appropriated for 15 months. The President was given that option by the lawmakers.

recommending a ceiling of 15 billion dollars on military spending in the new budget.

Retiring Undersecretary Lovett cautioned reporters yesterday not to think Webb would handle administrative matters alone. Lovett said both Acheson and Webb could be brought up to date very quickly, and without any interruption in the negotiations for an Atlantic pact or other pending issues of foreign policy.

He said he would stay as long as necessary to complete the transition, but expressed the hope that he could retire soon to what he called reasonably prosperous obscurity.

Eniwetok Test Chief to Head Study to Pick Arms of Future

By Elton C. Fay
Associated Press Reporter

The defense establishment yesterday chose the Army general who commanded the Eniwetok A-bomb tests to direct its program for deciding what weapons and systems of weapons would win a future war.

The appointment of Lieut. Gen. John E. Hull, present commander of Army forces in the Pacific, to be directed of the weapons systems evaluation group was announced by Defense Secretary Forrestal.

Later, said Forrestal, a civilian research director will be named to be the chief scientific officer of the group. It is made up of both military and civilian experts.

To Evaluate Systems

The group, intended to synchronize the thinking of military strategists with that of the scientists who create the weapons, "will be resonsible for the careful evaluation of all present or projected systems of attack and defense," said Forrestal.

This obviously involves such matters as determining whether, under a given situation in a war, an attack on an enemy target could be conducted better by the Air Forces' strategic bombing fleet, planes launched from carriers or a combination of the two.

In light of this, it was significant that Forrestal turned to a "neutral" agency, the Army, for a director of the group. Designation of either an Air or Navy officer would have aggravated the argument between those two services.

Creation of a weapons system evaluation unit was urged in the report of a Hoover government reorganization commission group that surveyed the national security organization. The report said that no close relationship existed between the Joint Chiefs of Staff (the commanders of the Army, Navy and Air Force) and the research and development board of the National Military Establishment.

LIEUT. GEN. JOHN E. HULL.

Forrestal announced, before appearance of the Hoover committee report, his intention to form the weapons evaluation group.

His statement yesterday disclosed his decision was taken after a study by an advisory group that he had named.

That advisory committee told him that while each of the three services had its own weapons assessment group, there was need for a top-level organization. The committee took cognizance of interservice feeling by saying:

"Although present evaluation groups within the National Military Establishment may be impartial as far as questions within their services are concerned, they must inevitably, because of their organizational position, become protagonists in questions involving interservice matters."

Russians See Bad Signs in Truman Talk

Moscow, Jan. 7 (AP).—A Tass dispatch said President Truman's State of the Union message to Congress gave the impression that things are very bad indeed. The dispatch was printed in all Moscow papers today.

Tass said the President began his address with the declaration that "the situation in the Nation is propitious" and by praising the capitalistic system.

"However, passing to concrete facts, Mr. Truman was obliged to recognize that American production is "not sufficiently high to satisfy our needs, that wages are too low, small enterprises are giving way to growing monopolies, farmers are unsure of their future, too many are unable to use the benefits of modern civilization, certain raw materials are being wasted, there is an acute need of electricity, and five million families live in slums."

Tass said the President's request for extensive military appropriations and universal military training made it clear the United States will continue a policy directed at "gaining world domination and the destruction of the independence of other countries."

Argentine Paper Calls Truman Equal to Task

Buenos Aires, Argentina, Jan. 7 (U.P.).—President Truman has proved to be "equal to the difficult circumstances" he has had to face and his annual message to Congress shows "precision and knowledge of affairs," the influential newspaper La Prensa commented today.

After stressing Mr. Truman's expressed confidence in private enterprise and his determination to carry on the antitrust fight, Presna said:

"The love of the United States people for their individual rights is a guarantee that any restrictions which may be imposed on some activities will not go beyond what is necessary to strengthen those rights."

est trip ever clocked between the Nation's largest cities.

Lieut. Col. Bill Haviland, one of the pilots, said the jaunt "was not a planned speed flight" but was made "within normal operating limits."

Air Force officials said they knew of no previous jet plane mark for the 711 air miles between Chicago and New York. The record for commercial aircraft, 1 hour 51 minutes and 43 seconds, was set in April, 1947, by an American Airlines DC-6.

Haviland and his companion, Lieut. Harry Howell, flew Lockheed F80C fighters.

Haviland said the weather was ideal with strong favoring tailwinds. Before the take-off he had estimated the trip would be made in one hour. He did not explain why it took longer.

The flight was made at altitudes of 30,000 to 40,000 feet. Howell said the unofficial average speed was 587 miles an hour and the top speed was close to 650.

Both pilots are members of the 159th Fighter Squadron of the Florida Guard. Haviland, 34, commanding officer of the squadron, was a Navy flier in the war; he lives in Janesville, Wis. Howell, 31, an Army flight instructor in the war, lives in Jacksonville, Fla.

Andrews Pilot Killed as Jet Explodes Near Florida Crowd

Miami, Fla., Jan. 7 (AP).—A jet-propelled "Shooting Star" fighter plane crashed and exploded only eight seconds away from a crowd of 5000 persons at the All American Air Maneuvers today.

The Andrews Base, Md., Air Force pilot was killed. He was First Lieut. James Marshall Hall, of Pine Bluff, Ark.

His plane fell a mile and a half from the grandstand, and no spectators were hurt.

The accident occurred as a V-formation of nine jets roared at 450 miles an hour in a shallow dive only 500 feet above the ground. There was a sudden flash and billowing flames.

Lieut. Col. Clarke Newlon, public information officer for the 336th Squadron, Fourth Fighter Group, Andrews Base, Md., to which the plane belonged, said an elevator came off the F-80 and threw it to the earth.

Heats of the Continental Trophy Race were won by T. B. Heisel, Gainesville, Fla.; S. J. Witman, Oshkosh, Wis., and defending champion Bill Brennand, Oshkosh, Wis. The top men will race in the semifinals Saturday and finals Sunday.

Humphrey Bogart Dad; Says Truman Loses $10

Hollywood, Jan. 7 (AP).—Humphrey Bogart film actor has a baby today—and $10 coming from the President of the United States.

He and Lauren Bacall are the parents of a son, Stephen Humphrey, their first. Stephen was born last night at Cedars of Lebanon Hospital, and weighed 6 pounds, 6 ounces. The jubilant Bogart related today President Truman bet him the baby would be a girl.

Bogar, who bet on Truman, saw the President here shortly before the election. "He'd better pay me, too," said Bogey.

Miss Bacall, who bets too, said her baby would be a blue-eyed blond boy, born on January 15. She was wrong only about the date.

U. S. Foils Red Try At Puppet Regime

By Marguerite Higgins

Berlin, Jan. 7 (NYHT).—The United States Military Government announced tonight it had foiled a Communist attempt this afternoon to set up a puppet administration for the district of Kreuzberg in the American-occupied sector of Berlin.

At 1 p. m. West German police, acting on orders of military government, took up positions around the railroad building in which the Communists were to meet. This prevented the Communists from following through with their plan of electing a burgomeister at a district assembly that would have pledged allegiance to the Soviet-sponsored regime the Russian sector.

Col. Frank Howley, American commandant, declared: "The people of the United States sector will not be subjected to any Soviet putsch to set up a government for anyone of the districts."

The Russian military administration gave its approval today to the establishment of a quasi-Parliament for the Soviet occupation zone.

The 36-man East-Zone Economic Commission — which until now has been purely appointive—was enlarged to 101 members, the majority of whom have been "democratically elected" to form the Parliament.

The Communist grip will remain as tight as ever, however, for the additions contain only about 10 persons who are not either Communists or members of Communist puppet organizations.

Wilhelm Pieck, veteran Moscow-trained Communist leader, and his colleague, Otto Grotewohl, cochairman of the Communist Party, were among those named.

On Long-Term Pact

Anglo-Soviet Trade Talks Deadlocked

London, Jan. 7 (AP).—Anglo-Russian talks for a new long-term trade agreement are deadlocked after eight months of negotiations, a Board of Trade spokesman said tonight.

He confirmed reports the impasse developed after Britain charged Russia with violating the "spirit" of a one-year agreement that ended in December. The Russians said British prices were too high.

Britain still has hopes, the spokesman said, another one-year Anglo-Russian trade pact may be drawn. But the Board of Trade is "very pessimistic" about any long-term pact.

Russia delivered 750,000 tons of wheat for sterling that, the spokesman said, she was to spend in Britain on machinery, rails and other specified products.

The Russians, instead, sought raw materials not named in the agreement, the spokesman said.

Denmark Held Expecting Bid To Pact Parley

Copenhagen, Denmark, Jan. 7 (AP).—A Foreign Office spokesman said tonight Denmark expects an official invitation to join the proposed North Atlantic Alliance talks in Washington within three weeks.

He said that the United States government had asked Denmark some time ago whether it would accept an invitation.

Much Work Remains On Treaty, Lovett Says

Acting Secretary of State Lovett said yesterday that much work remained to be done before other countries could be brought into the present seven-nation Atlantic treaty discussions.

He declared treaty-making had gone faster than originally expected, but it will take longer to finish the work than some foreign reports indicated.

Schools Closed, Nuns Get Out Of Romania

Frankfurt, Jan. 7—(NYHT).—A mass exodus of German Catholic nuns from Communist Romania is under way, the military government of Bavaria disclosed today.

The first trainload of 200 robed Roman Catholic sisters reached Salzburg today, en route to Munich, but Austrian border police refused to let them pass. Their train was rerouted to the Brenner Pass. "But now they are lost somewhere in Austria," said a military government spokesman today.

The nuns, members of the "Englischer Fraueleins," a Roman Catholic teaching order, are leaving Romania because the government closed their girls' schools. The nuns have not been expelled by the Communist government; they requested repatriation because there was no reason for their continued residence in Bucharest.

Michael, Cardinal von Faulhaber, primate of Bavaria, arranged for the nuns to leave Romania, for Munich. The order was founded in Bavaria in the seventeenth century by an Englishwoman.

Church Group Would Halt Aid to Holland

Buck Hill Falls, Pa., Jan. 7 (AP).—The largest Protestant agency in North America called upon the United States today to cut off Marshall Plan aid to the Netherlands until that country withdraws from Indonesia.

Leaders of the Foreign Missions Conference commended the United States Government for its stated policy during the "present emergency in Indonesia" and added:

"We respectfully urge that the United States continue unwaveringly in this attitude even though it may have to stand alone among the great powers in refusing to buttress colonialism in Indonesia."

The resolution was passed by the Protestant missionary leaders at the final session of a four-day meeting.

The conference represents 108 Protestant foreign mission boards in 61 denominations.

Indonesian Issue Boils Again in U. N.

Lake Success, Jan. 7 (NYHT).—The Security Council resumed deliberations at Lake Success today and found the Indonesian issue, far from being settled, was still sizzling; that the Dutch have been politely flouting its orders and that its own Committee for Good Offices in Batavia was ready to quit.

At its first 1949 session, the Council was told that not only have the Dutch failed to comply with the U. N. instructions for a cease-fire and release of political prisoners, but that Indonesia is faced with the prospect of large scale guerilla warfare unless the U. N. acts quickly and decisively.

It heard vigorous appeals from representatives of Indonesia, the Philippines, Australia and India for a prompt withdrawal of Dutch troops to make the cease-fire effective, and it heard Dr. J. H. van Royen, the Netherlands representative, admit that although hostilities have officially been called off, mopping up operations would continue for some time.

Then the Council adjourned until Tuesday afternoon, to study a sobering report from its Committee of Good Offices, which in effect proposed its own dissolution because the Dutch had not yet permitted its military observers to carry out their functions.

The Council, in short, was confronted with the consequences of its own failure at Paris last month to halt Dutch "police action," which began on December 13. And at the end of the day it was not clear what action the U. N. body will or can take.

Carlos P Romulo, chief of the Philippine delegation, went so far as to ask for sanctions against the Dutch. He referred angrily to the Security Council's handling of the problem as "among the most tragic in the history of the United Nations."

The only kind words about the Netherlands today came from Van Royen, who reiterated that Dutch operations "have just restored real peace to Indonesia." He conceded that Republican President Soekarno and other Indonesian leaders are still being confined to a small island, although "hostilities have come to an end as far as the Netherlands are concerned."

South Burma Revolt Threat

Rangoon, Burma, Jan. 7 (AP).—A government spokesman said today that Premier Thakin Nu's regime faces the threat of a general upheaval in large areas of southern Burma.

Serious clashes already have broken out between Burmese and separatist Karen tribesmen. The informant said the situation has become "extremely delicate."

The fighting grew out of Christmas Eve incidents in the Mergui district of extreme southeastern Burma. The Karen Nationalist Union, a separatist organization, charged that Burmese military police massacred 200 Karen men and women attending midnight religious services. The secretary of the union said the police made hand grenade attacks on churches in nine villages.

French Unify African Defense From Morocco to Congo

Paris, Jan. 7 (NYHT).—French West Africa from the Mediterranean south to the Belgian Congo, more than 2000 miles away, has been grouped into a coordinated defense area for the first time, it was learned today.

This is expected to help carry out the proposed Atlantic Pact. The United States already has "a gentleman's agreement" with France whereby American planes can use North African bases.

The new defense measure was taken when [illegible] made [illegible] sioner in French West Africa, responsible for defense throughout the vast territory.

In addition to West Africa and its Saraha wastelands, the area includes French Equitorial Africa, Togoland and the Cameroons.

Heretofore, North Africa, including Alegria, Morocco and Tunis, was the only coordinated defense area in Africa. General Alphonse Juin, resident-general in Morocco, is responsible there.

It would require only another government step to make all of [illegible]h Africa one military com-

Chinese Reds Push Farther Into Tientsin

Nanking, China (Saturday), Jan. 8 (U.P.)—Communist artillery peppered the outskirts of Tientsin today, and a reliable source reported that Red ground troops had smashed to within two miles of the heart of the city.

Pro-government dispatches admitted the city was under a major attack from the East and Southwest and that panic had flared among the 1,755,000 residents, necessitating a 5 p. m. curfew.

Pro-government dispatches said more than 60,000 troops under Gen. Lin Piao, Communist Manchurian commander, launched a ground attack after Red artillery had laid down a three-hour bombardment.

A Communist radio broadcast, underlining Red determination to continue the civil war despite Nationalist peace offers, predicted that Tientsin, Peiping, Nanking and Shanghai would all soon be "liberated."

A high official source said tonight that China is expected to ask the United States and Russia, and possibly Britain and France for mediation in ending the civil war.

[The Nanking News said an authoritative source disclosed the government will issue a "second peace statement," the Associated Press reported. The news said the statement might indicate whether Chiang Kai-shek will quit the Presidency.]

The Red radio charged that government troops encircled southwest of the key rail center at Suchow were preparing to use poison gas to break out of the Communist ring.

Earlier, semiofficial sources here had reported a minor government victory north of this threatened capital.

Government forces had reportedly captured Yutang and Kucheng, Red village bases flanking the Nanking-Pengpu rail line, about 45 miles northwest of here.

Red General Again 'Killed,' Nanking Says

By The Associated Press

The Chinese Government says it at last has killed Russian-trained Liu Po-cheng, one-eyed Communist commander in central China, whose skilled generalship heaped disaster on Nationalist armies.

Gen. Teng Wen-Yi, government military spokesman, said in Nanking that government bombers killed General Liu in a raid December 13 on a village north of the capital.

At that time Liu was leading his troops against the trapped army group.

The government has "killed" Liu on several previous occasions. Each time he turned up again. In one previous battle he lost an eye.

"This time," General Teng said, "his death is definitely confirmed. His leg was torn off and he received body wounds which killed him."

The spokesman said Liu's body was buried at Tingping, southwest of Suhsien, where Liu sprang the trap which doomed all the major government forces of central China north of Nanking.

If Liu is dead, then General Chen Yi, a highly successful general himself, undoubtedly will lead the climactic Communist campaign on the Yangtze.

4 'Severe Earthquakes' Are Reported Near Reno

Admiral William D. Leahy, President Truman's Chief of Staff, continued to improve yesterday following an operation Wednesday for a genito-urinary tract ailment at the Bethesda (Md.) Naval Hospital. The hospital said the 73-year-old Leahy "continues to be in a very satisfactory condition."

Fortune Smiles On GI When Fiancee Lands

After months of bad breaks, Tech. Sergt. Robert E. Reynolds of Fort Belvoir, Va., is luckier than he knows today.

Things began to look up for the veteran soldier when his 19-year-old Italian sweetheart landed in New York Wednesday, more than a year after she first tried to get passage to America to marry him.

On the same day, Reynolds was promoted to technical sergeant, after eight years in the Army.

Thursday, the Ohio-born soldier promoted himself a three-day pass to meet his lovely fiancee when she landed in New York from Rome.

Although it looked for a while that Miss Gioia Culley would not be admitted to this country, because, although she was born here of an American father, and a Russian mother, she was living in Italy and had no birth certificate. However, the Immigration Department waived the visa requirement and admitted her to the country and to the arms of her hero.

Granted Honeymoon Furlough

But Reynolds and his bride-to-be left New York yesterday unaware of still another stroke of good fortune.

After being informed of the love story by The Washington Post, Fort Belvoir's commanding general, Maj. Gen. Douglas L. Weart, announced he would grant Reynolds enough leave to get married and take a honeymoon.

But before The Post could contact Reynolds in New York, the soldier had left for Fort Belvoir to get in under the wire on his three-day pass.

The couple drove down to Virginia last night, unaware that they could have honeymooned in Times Square, the section of America which Gioia had said she wanted to see "first and most."

Met in Rome at Dance

The soldier and his girl first met in Rome three years ago at a dance. They wanted to get married soon after but could not because there was no record of the girl's birth.

Her father is an American, Fred Howard Culley, who hasn't been heard of since 1932. Gioia was born in America.

When the soldier returned to America he started needling the Army, the State Department, the immigration authorities, anybody who would make the course of true love run smooth.

Once, everything was set and Reynolds had posted the necessary $500 bond, when his mother was taken seriously ill, and the money had to go for medical services.

But their troubles are over today. With a furlough coming up, the future looks bright.

Walling was convicted in April, 1946, of setting up a gaming table and sentenced to a term of from 6 to 18 months in Lorton.

In announcing Walling's arrest, the FBI also disclosed it recovered some of the loot from the arsenal on New Year's Day from the hold of a Mexican vessel, the Reo Popalospan, which was docked in San Francisco.

The FBI said 98 machine guns, 90 M-1 carbines and 11 bazookas which were packed in 32 crates were aboard the Reo Popalospan. The Mexican government counsel and the ship's captain cooperated in the recovery, the FBI added.

The arsenal theft was engineered, the FBI said, by a guard employed there. Walling's arrest yesterday completed the roundup of the 12 men involved, the FBI said.

Truman Sees Prosperity

shortages threaten our "expanding capacity."

He asked for Government controls over key materials in short supply in place of voluntary agreements now provided. He repeated his request for priorities and allocation authority in rail transportation.

He asked that "selective price controls" be made available. "We cannot be certain," he said, "that another upsurge of general inflation will not reappear this year under the composite pressures which are at work."

He repeated his request for rent control "for at least two years" and export controls "to carry out our program of aiding economic recovery abroad."

Finally, he again asked for control over speculative dealings on the commodity exchanges.

2. "Policies to Protect the Victims of Inflation."

"While we are fighting further inflation," he said, "we should recognize that severe hardship has already been imposed on those whose incomes have lagged far behind the increase in the cost of living."

Would Boost Relief Payments

Specifically, he recommended: (1) increase in old-age insurance; (2) increase in minimum wage to 75 cents an hour; (3) increase in relief payments.

He then added: "The housing program which I recommend will make a start toward providing decent housing for those whose low incomes confine them to slums in these days of grossly inflated housing prices."

3. "Policies to Promote Balanced Economic Growth."

"We cannot accept the dangerous idea that inflation's end will automatically bring about a period of stable prosperity," he said. Under this heading Mr. Truman asked for:

Development of natural resources, a public power program including a start on the St. Lawrence River project; and investigation of important river basins for "coordinated development plans."

Urges New Price-Support Law

For agriculture he urged "long-range price support legislation" with a "goal of farm living standards comparable to those of the rest of the population." He asked adequate storage facilities, improvement of distribution of farm products, adequate credit facilities. He asked a study of domestic markets and of adequate diets to provide additional markets for farm products. He spoke of negotiations for a new international wheat agreement to stabilize foreign markets.

He declared the European Recovery Program must be continued. "Its success will facilitate a return to reasonable freedom of world trade," he said. The charter of the International Trade Organization, he said, "which was signed by 54 nations last year, lays the foundation for this return."

He urged a housing bill to provide a million units in seven years; slum clearance, etc.

The Annual Economic Review, this year, Mr. Truman pointed out, does not deal with education, health and social security programs. However, such programs were suggested last year, and Mr. Truman offered the following recommendations: (1) Federal aid for elementary and secondary education, (2) opportunities for higher education through cooperation between the Federal Government and public agencies and private institutions, including a system of general scholarships and fellowships, and (3) a study to determine the national need for educational facilities and how best to provide them.

He again urged a program of national health insurance, Federal grants for hospitals and more doctors, dentists and nurses.

He also urged expansion of old age, disability and unemployment insurance to cover the "millions of workers now excluded."

Suggests Pay Controls

The President repeated his belief that the Government should be able to prevent any wage increase that would force a breakthrough in price ceilings. But he expressed a firm conviction that "the normal processes of collective bargaining" would produce "sound wage adjustments" without the Government having to step in.

He then bunched together "a number of other important projects on which we should make further progress this year."

"Our conservation practices in many areas require improvement, including the regulation of timber cutting, the protection of public range lands, and the development of our tidelands oil resources.

"We should press forward with our programs of basic research and exploration. We should seek continually to encourage the bargaining of labor and management along lines most consistent with national progress and stability."

In closing, Mr. Truman declared, "this is a period in which our ability to master our affairs in our own way will be rigorously tested.

"Abundant resources and rapidly advancing technology are both a blessing and a responsibility.

"Our strength lies, however, less in these resources themselves than in our will to use them effectively. This task requires adapting our private and Government institutions to changing circumstances."

Economic Advisers Discount Past as Guide to Prosperity

Full production, full employment and maximum purchasing power can be achieved in the United States if labor, farmers, business and Government "are guided less by the records of the past than by the possibilities of the future."

Such was the gist of the annual report of President Truman's Council of Economic Advisers, which the Chief Executive forwarded to Congress yesterday with this comment:

"The people of the United States have just enjoyed another year of bountiful prosperity. This has enabled us further to strengthen our economy at home, and further to supplement the recovery of freedom-loving peoples elsewhere who seek lasting peace."

Six Ways to Ward Off Depression

As if urging particular attention to the council's report at this time, Mr. Truman added:

"Let us al lremember that our unparalleled prosperity has not been maintained by chance, and that we can lose it if we leave the future to chance.

"Now is the time to formulate and execute a practical program of immediate and long-range economic measures pointed toward stability and growth."

The council outlined six basic objectives to promote economic growth, and to prevent our post-war prosperity from ending in a bust.

It cited high profits by industry and "relatively low" purchasing power of the public as examples of "maladjustments" which must be corrected in the transition from inflation to stability.

Would Cut Production Increase

The long-range objectives the three-member group offered are "guideposts for continued prosperity," it said, and not "economic bluebrints or plans used in a regulated economy." They are:

1. Increase in production in the next few years at an annual rate of about 3 per cent, compared with a 4 per cent increase in 1948 over 1947.

2. Careful consideration of future requirements in determining business expansion. "Additions to capital equipment in the past," the report states, "were accomplished in spurts, and periods in which they exceeded long-run requirements were followed by periods in which they fell far short. These violent fluctuations in private capital outlays have been a major factor in generating booms and depressions."

3. An increase in consumer income and spending, to promote maximum production of consumer goods and services "over the ensuing years." Such income should be more fairly distributed to "avoid areas of want in a land of plenty."

Expand Statistical Services

4. Expansion of the Government's fact-finding and statistical services to enhance their value to businessmen, farmers and others. Among other important Government aids to private industry it listed scientific research and development.

5. Strict conservation of natural resources. "We must reexamine our development programs in such fields as reclamation, and assess them in terms of our national production objectives. There is danger in doing too much now." The council also suggests reexamination of many projects—irrigation, navigation, flood control, hydroelectric power, etc.,—in the West to determine which should be pressed forward with great speed, and which may be postponed.

6. Increased imports of raw materials and of goods and services which cannot be produced economically in this country.

Wage Boosts Deflationary

The council said there must be a "voluntary adjustment" in wage and price levels to give consumers more purchasing power.

"It is not easy," it said, "to determine the exact point at which wage increases which add to purchasing power become deflationary because they add too much to costs."

It is further complicated, it adds, because it "involves the interests of powerful organized groups."

The Nation economically is in a better position to survive a shock than in the 1920s, the council said.

Business has become better informed and more prudent, particularly in its inventory policies.

"There has been less speculation generally."

Cushions Against Depression

The Social Security System, veterans programs, the farm price support program and similar projects will cushion any downward swing. Wartime savings by business, State and local governments and individuals will also act as a shock absorber, and insured bank deposits will operate against large-scale withdrawal of funds such as occurred during the last depression."

"With a tight labor market, more breadwinners per family, and more progressive taxation, the distribution of income has improved since the prewar period, although these gains have been halted by inflation," the report signed by the three council members, Edwin G. Nourse, Leon H. Keyserling and John D. Clark, asserts.

Employment Averaged 59,400,000 Last Year

The United States very nearly reached its postwar dream of 60 million jobs throughout last year, President Truman revealed to Congress yesterday.

In his economic report he asserted employment averaged 59,400,000 for the year. The low was 57,100,000 during the winter; the high 61,600,000 last summer. In 1939 the average was 45 million.

Unemployment last year averaged about two million.

est operation. Abdul Rahman Azzam Pasha, secretary of the Arab League said, the "Jews took a terrific beating this time and failed utterly in their bid to destroy the Egyptian army and control southern Palestine up to the Egyptian frontier."

The Israeli chief of operations, Col. Yigal Yadin, however, estimated the Egyptians suffered 2500 casualties, including 700 killed and 700 captured in two weeks of fighting.

According to Yadin the Israeli strike into Egypt unfolded this way:

Israeli forces secretly repaired the old Roman road leading southwest from Beersheba and suddenly drove against the Egyptians, Yadin said. The Egyptians "ran like hell."

"But it was a hard fight," Yadin said. "The cost to us also was considerable."

Israeli units moved down the old Roman road into the rear of the Egyptian lines. Once the Egyptians began to give ground the Jews began a hot pursuit, he declared.

The Jews reached the Egyptian coastal base of El 'Arish, 30 miles inside Egyption territory. They also pushed west of Abu Awugeila, an interior road town, 15 miles beyond the Palestine frontier.

Yadin said Jewish forces had not been in Egypt's Sinai Peninsula for 3400 years.

"While we were there . . . we figured we might as well do what damage we could to Egypt's rear air bases," he explained.

British Accuse Israel Of Invading Egypt

London, Jan. 7 (U.P.).—The foreign office today formally accused Israel of invading Egypt, charging that Jewish troops had pushed within three miles of the main coastal highway linking Cairo with the Holy Land.

A foreign office spokesman said that Israeli forces were three miles south of the Egyptian coastal town of Rafa at noon yesterday.

However, other British spokesmen contradicted reports that Britain would seek immediately strong international action against Israel and said Britain would wait outcome of the Israeli-Egyptian peace talks before proposing further United Nations action.

Restoration Of Executive Arm Favored

By The Associated Press

Former President Herbert Hoover said yesterday that he will recommend restoration of the President's authority to reorganize the Government through executive orders.

The only living former President went to the White House to get the President's view before disclosing his decision as chairman of the bipartisan Committee on Reorganization of the Executive Branch.

Emerging from the President's office, Hoover said he had conferred with the Chief Executive on only the one matter.

He recalled that President Roosevelt formerly had authority to reorganize the Government subject to congressional veto, but that authority expired last April.

"We discussed whether the commission should or should not recommend that this authority be renewed," Hoover said.

He did not quote Mr. Truman, but said that the commission will recommend renewal.

"That authority is very necessary if some 70 agencies, commissions, bureaus, agencies and entities now running around loose are to be brought into control of one of the departments," the former President said.

Budget Ceiling Suspension To Be Asked

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

Suspension of "Budget ceilings" under the Congressional Reorganization Act will be recommended to the organization meeting of the new House Appropriations Committee, Representative Clarence Cannon (D., Mo.) said last night.

Cannon, who will succeed Representative John Taber (R., N. Y.), as head of the committee, said he will move to drop the 2-year-old "Legislative Budget" procedure "pending further study."

The next chairman of the House money unit said he will recommend a "new approach," adding:

"I believe in the objective of the Legislative Budget (designed to set spending limits) but the present method hasn't worked."

Martin Opposes

Former Speaker Joseph W. Martin (R., Mass.) hit Cannon's proposal as a blow at the Monroney-La Follette legislative reorganization and predicted the bulk of House Republicans will oppose the "suspension."

Martin charged that staff changes Democrats are planning in the House Appropriations Committee will "further undermine the act."

Advance skirmishing in the annual battle over legislative budget machinery developed as President Truman prepared to send his multi-billion-dollar budget message to Congress, Monday noon.

Under the congressional reorganization, a joint budget committee comprising the 102 members of House and Senate appropriations and revenue units must set spending and revenue goals, and report them to Congress by February 15.

Committee Shift Planned

Cannon said he will propose a concurrent resolution suspending the procedure to his House committee when it meets to organize in a week or two, and if his committee backs him up will take it to the floor.

He declined to disclose details of his "new approach," but in other quarters it was learned that a reorganization of the committee is in the works.

Under the plan being discussed, Democratic control of the committee would be raised from 25 to 18 to a ratio of 27 Democrats to 18 Republicans. The committee would then be divided into nine five-member subcommittees, with a 3-to-2 party ratio on each. The subcommittees would meet first as a group to weigh the over-all spending and revenue outlook and then would go right to work on the money bills instead of waiting until February 15.

Cannon charged the Reorganization Act's legislative budget machinery, launched at the start of the last Congress, was "time-wasting and set meaningless ceilings that were promptly ignored and forgotten." He said the first attempt to fix a ceiling in 1947 "ended in a conference deadlock." Although agreement was reached last year, he said "no one paid any attention to the figure."

Favors Keeping "Target"

Martin told newsmen, however, that the act "never pretended to set anything but a target and it's a mighty good thing to preserve."

"I know that even in February you can't say how much you are going to save," said the House Republican leader.

"But Congress needs some economy goal to shoot at. If we can't make it, we will know that we tried."

Saying repeal or suspension of the legislative budgeting procedure would be "the beginning of the end of the Congressional Reorganization Act, the former Speaker added:

'I didn't vote for that act just for the congressional salary raises and pensions that were in it."

Richmonder Held For Miscegenation

A 35-year-old truck driver is awaiting trial in Richmond on a charge of violating Virginia's miscegenation law, while his bride is being held in the Richmond City Jail on a perjury charge, it was disclosed yesterday.

The man is Willie E. Purcell, 410 East 9th st., Richmond, who was arrested Wednesday on a warrant sworn out by his wife's mother, Mrs. Ada C. Rhoton of 25 E. 4th st., Richmond. He was released on $500 bond.

His bride of one week, listed as Stella Mae Rhoton, was charged Tuesday with falsely listing her age as 21 and her birthplace as Kingsport, Tenn., when she applied for a marriage license last week.

Thomas R. Miller, clerk of Hustings Court in Richmond, told The Washington Post a photostatic copy of the girl's birth certificate, furnished by the Virginia State Department of Health, shows her age to be 18 and her birthplace Scott County, Va.

Circumstances in the Richmond case bear a striking similarity to those of one pending in Roanoke, Va., in which Clark Council Hamilton, a steelworker, was charged by his mother-in-law, Mrs. Ada L. Hammond, with violating the same law, which makes it a felony for Negroes and white to intermarry.

Hamilton was jailed at Salem, Va., on December 24. Preliminary hearing in Roanoke County Trial Justice Court is set for January 12. His wife, the former Florence Madalone Hammond, 19, is a Baltimore stenographer.

According to Richmond Police Officer G. E. Alexander, who first arrested Mrs. Purcell and then arrested her husband with the assistance of Officer C. O. Williams, the warrant charges Purcell as follows: "Unlawfully and feloniously being a colored man, entered into marriage with a white woman."

The Hustings Court clerk said the Rhoton girl presented a Bible record of her birth when she and her husband applied for a marriage license last week. Miller said her age, shown as "21," apparently had been altered.

Married December 31

The two were married December 31 at Richmond City Hall by J. H. B. Peay, a justice of the peace with authority granted by the court to perform marriage ceremonies.

Miller said the girl's mother appeared in his office this week and complained of his having issued a marriage certificate to a minor.

He said Purcell had a copy of his own birth certificate when the license was issued. It listed his color and that of his parents as white, according to Miller.

The clerk checked a photostatic copy of the girl's birth certificate before charging her with perjury regarding her age and birthplace.

A woman who said she was Mrs. Lucille Kirstein, 23, of 9 North 29th st., Richmond, and a sister of Mrs. Purcell, told a reporter for The Washington Post that Mrs. Purcell "has been pregnant five months." The jailor at Richmond City Jail also said she is pregnant and is "being cared for by our internes."

Doubts She'll Stand Trial

The jailor said she is booked as Stella Mae Rhoton, 18, and "probably will be sent to City Home in the next day or two." He said he doubted if she would be able to stand trial. A preliminary hearing is set for January 18 in Richmond Police Court.

Purcell, whose preliminary hearing is set for January 20 in Police Court, Part 2 (South Richmond), said his wife is being held under $1000 bond.

He told The Washington Post by telephone that he is trying to raise enough money to bail his wife, but so far had met with no success.

Purcell said his wife loves him and that he is "very much" in love with her.

"There is not any truth to the charge against me," he said, adding, "somebody is trying to give me a raw deal."

Asked if he would remain in Richmond should he be acquitted, Purcell replied:

"Absolutely, I wouldn't move a lick, even if I have to serve a penitentiary sentence."

Accused Described

Purcell was described by Mrs. Kirstein as being "tall, with curly, black hair."

"I would say he is a colored person," she added.

Miller said the girl's mother "insists that he is a Negro."

Mrs. Kirstein said her sister finished the eighth grade at Bainbridge Elementary School in Richmond and later worked in a box factory. She said they have four brothers between the ages of 26 and 34, and another sister, about 27 years old. Mrs. Purcell is 18, Mrs. Kirstein said.

Truman Pay Rise Backed By Leaders

By The Associated Press

House Democratic and Republican leaders agreed yesterday that President Truman ought to get more money but they were split over ways of raising his income.

Democratic Leader McCormack of Massachusetts told the House a bill to give the President more probably will be taken up next week. Acting Republican Leader Halleck of Indiana agreed to that procedure.

The President now gets a $75,000-a-year salary but taxes take about $35,000 of that. There have been various proposals for boosting his income, either through a salary raise or a big tax-free expense fund.

Representative Rich (R., Pa.) told the House he favors a straight salary increase.

It's all right to raise Mr. Truman's salary to $100,000 or so, Rich said, but it should be taxable.

"Let him pay his taxes like everybody else," Rich said. "Let him feel the pinch of high taxes like everybody else."

McCormack reminded Rich that Congress has given its members financial relief in the form of a $2500 annual tax-free expense account.

Speaker Sam Rayburn has predicted Congress will give Mr. Truman a pay increase or at least raise "the emoluments" of his office.

Negroes Ask Specific Draft Act Guarantees

Two Negro leaders yesterday demanded that Congress write into the draft act specific guarantees against race discrimination in the armed services.

The two men are Grant Reynolds, chairman, and A. Philip Randolph, treasurer, of the "Committee Against Jim Crow in Military Servce and Training."

They said at a news conference that legislation will be introduced to amend the draft act to:

1. Forbid the Government to buy any military supplies from a manufacturing plant that discriminates against an employe because of his color.

2. Make it impossible for the Government to train or station any Negro soldier in a State that has segregation or "Jim Crow" laws.

3. Guarantee that Negro soldiers will receive equal treatment with white soldiers while being transported from one State to another.

Reynolds and Randolph said they intend to ask Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York to support State legislation to abolish segregation in the New York National Guard.

Hearing on Segregation In Armed Forces Today

An all-day public hearing on segregation and discrimination in the armed forces will be conducted by the Commission of Inquiry Into the Wartime Treatment of Negro GI's at 10:30 a. m. today, at the 12th st. branch YMCA, 1816 12th st. nw.

Arthur Garfield Hays, nationally known lawyer, will act as counsel for the group, which was formed last May. Other members are Thurman L. Dodson, president of the National Bar Association; Henry Epstein, former New York State solicitor general, and Joseph L. Raub, jr., chairman of Americans for Democratic Action.

Carolina Court Upholds Segregation in Carrier

Raleigh, N. C., Jan. 7 (U.P.).—The North Carolina Supreme Court upheld a public carrier segregation law today.

The court also upheld a city ordinance against snake-handling by religious cults. It said "the public safety is superior to a religious practice."

In the segregation case, the court upheld the conviction of two Negroes, Andrew S. Johnson and Bayard Rustin, and two white men, Igal Roodenko and Joseph Felmont, for violating the Negro-white seating rule on an intrastate bus.

Bus Driver Ned Leonard said the four took seats together in the front of his Carolina Trailways bus, which ran between Raleigh and Charlotte, N. C. They claimed they were interstate passengers bound for Danville, Va. Leonard said he told them the bus went only from Raleigh to Charlotte, but they refused to move when he offered to change their tickets.

Ex-Representative May Serve Committee

By The Associated Press

Former Congressman Frank Hook from Michigan's upper peninsula will return to Federal government service, whatever the outcome of his contesting the seating of Republican Senator Homer Ferguson.

Representative John Lesinski, (D., Mich.) said in an interview yesterday that he will be chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor, and that one of his first acts will be to name Hook his special counsel.

Lesinski said that Hook will accept the appointment.

State Actions Held Forcing FEPC Laws

The increase of State antidiscrimination laws has made a movement for a national fair employment practices law almost inevitable, a new Library of Congress study indicates.

The study, "Antidiscrimination Legislation in the American States," is contained in the latest Public Affairs Bulletin, just issued by the Library of Congress. It was prepared by Dr. W. Brooke Graves, senior specialist in American government and public administration in the library's Legislative Reference Service.

After noting a steady increase in the number of laws against discrimination in various types of occupations or employment, Dr. Graves concluded that it was almost inevitable that there should develop some such movement as that now under way in many jurisdictions, to gather together in one statute a general prohibition of discrimination.

Individual guarantees applying to particular groups in particular States have been enforced for many years, the bulletin shows, while the enlarged program envisioned by the framers of so-called "FEPC" legislation appears thus far to be working effectively in the States in which it has been tried.

20 Witnesses In Ga. Slaying

Lyons, Ga., Jan. 7 (AP).—The defense will offer the testimony of more than 20 witnesses against that of one for the prosecution in the trial next week of two white men accused of murdering a Negro.

The State prosecutor, Solicitor General W. H. Lanier, said today that Robert Mallard's widow, Amy, is the only one who can offer direct testimony in the case.

Mrs. Mallard claims her husband was shot to death by masked men the night of November 19. She has named one of the two accused men, William L. Howell, as being in the group of men, and has identified a car at the scene as belonging to the other, Roderick L. Clifton.

T. Ross Sharpe, who is representing Howell and Clifton, said he expects the trial to be over within two days. He said he can prove Clifton and Howell were not present when Mallard was shot to death.

Glass-Making Relics Found At Jamestown Colony Site

Evidence that glass making was the first industry established by the English colonists in America has been brought out in excavations on Jamestown Island, Va., the Interior Department announced yesterday.

Jamestown was the first permanent English settlement in what became the United States. It was established in 1607. Records show that 17 months later, in the second contingent of colonists, the Virginia Company of London sent workmen to make glass and other commodities.

Remains of Furnaces Found

The remains of four furnaces, and of ashes, clinkers, crucible pots, and pieces of glass were uncovered in excavations which were begun last September after a careful study of all available historical documents, maps and other materials.

They were carried on by J. C. Harrington, regional archeologist, in cooperation with Charles E. Hatch, historian of Colonial National Historical Park. This area includes Jamestown Island, Williamsburg and Yorktown.

The site selected by the colonists for the glass-making was at Glass House Point on the mainland adjacent to Jamestown Island. The name is known to have been attached to the point since 1654. Excavations there now leave no doubt that glass was melted and worked there.

Lapsed for More Than Decade

However, the first attempts do not appear to have been successful, for after 1609, activity lapsed for more than a decade. In 1621 a second attempt to establish a glass factory was made. This was abandoned in 1624. The location of the second attempt has not been definitely established. Evidences found at Glass House Point indicate that this may have been the site of the second attempt also.

George Kernodle of Washington, an authority on old glass, has examined the objects uncovered. He emphasized the great significance of these proofs of the working of glass in 1608 and later.

Bad Reporting

Although the report of the Organization for European Economic Cooperation was released in Paris some days ago, only one unrevised copy of that document has reached ECA officials in Washington, and a week or 10 days will be required before it can be reproduced and distributed. Meantime, the American public has to be content with scanty cabled statements and belated official explanations of the OEEC recommendations and findings. Moreover, considerable harm has been done by some rather scary reports from Paris emphasizing the OEEC conclusion that on the basis of present planning a formidable trade deficit would continue to plague ECA countries after the recovery program ends. Subsequent fuller information about the contents of the report dissipates such misconceptions, since it becomes apparent that the figures were only cited to point out the need for a more realistic appraisal of objectives and a reexamination of the national programs devised for achieving them. Unfortunately, prejudgments based on inadequate information have a prejudicial effect that no amount of subsequent explanation can hope entirely to dissipate.

This kind of inept, partial reporting could be avoided by sending important reports, such as that of the OEEC, by air and releasing them simultaneously here and abroad. This would cost very little, entail only a slight delay in the release date, and, above all, give the American people the full and reliable information to which they are entitled about the progress and the plans of nations that are beneficiaries of their own Government's aid program.

Marshall And Lovett

Mr. Marshall's secretaryship was unique in that it was virtually an extension of his wartime office as Chief of Staff. He was the Western world's generalissimo in the cold war with the Soviet Union. As he lays down his office, the struggle is still on. But, even if war is a familiar atmosphere to Secretary Marshall, he is used to rules from textbooks which have no place in the Soviet library. As Secretary he had to deal with an international conspiracy operating by stealth, the Trojan horse, deceit, and complete lack of respect for treaty obligations. To a man of Mr. Marshall's caliber, such tactics were thoroughly repugnant, and his distaste for them was difficult to hide. What puzzled Secretary Marshall to the end—and he said as much to Stalin—was why the Soviet Union threw away the good will that the Russian warmaking had generated in America.

As generalissimo for the Western forces, Mr. Marshall elicited the highest respect among the leaders of the Western world. His force of personality, let alone the position and the power of the United States, put him at the head of the table at international gatherings, just as he was tacitly the leader of the Joint Chiefs in wartime. Secretary Marshall gives off the aura of a man of character. Europeans always knew where he stood, and the ground seemed to be the firmer for his standing upon it, so that he had a way of inspiring implicit confidence from his coadjutors. This applied to foreigners as to Americans. At home he had the same myth value as Secretary Hull. That is to say, the country felt the safer with him at the helm, and Mr. Truman was as much the beneficiary of his prestige with the country as President Roosevelt was of Mr. Hull's. Yet Mr. Marshall had a fidelity to duty and to his Commander in Chief which was almost instinctive. That fidelity is in the highest tradition of the armed services of the United States. May it long continue! Without it Mr. Marshall would never have undertaken the quixotic errand to China which bridged his military life and his Secretaryship. As he retires, with the thanks and sympathy of the American people, he has the satisfaction of knowing that the United States is in what he would call a better "posture" in the cold war than it was when he assumed the Secretaryship.

To Mr. Lovett, Undersecretary and pinch-hitter extraordinary, the country owes a debt only slightly less than the debt it owes to Mr. Marshall. Some people seem to think that no good can come out of Wall Street! Well, Mr. Lovett came out of Wall Street, to the immense benefit of the public service. Mr. Lovett topped a great record in two wars with a memorable stint as Undersecretary. His urbanity and companionability made a perfect foil for the sternness and taciturnity of Mr. Marshall. They were an excellent team. How much work Mr. Lovett took off Mr. Marshall's shoulders in the 20 hours day that he seemed to spend on the job only Mr. Marshall and Mrs. Lovett know. From his assignment there has been no surcease since the grueling watch he had to undertake during the hot summer months of hourly crises over Berlin.

Mr. Lovett gained the highest esteem from members of Congress and every diplomat with whom he came in contact, probably even the egregious Mr. Panyushkin. Nothing fazed him, nothing impaired his faintly humorous outlook or his excellent manners. A finely tempered man, he will let his service speak for itself, deprecating any laurels he has gathered and ruminating when he gets back to Wall Street on the improvisation that takes the place of system in the front rank of Government.

Acheson As Secretary

For several weeks it had been taken for granted that Secretary Marshall, with one kidney left and that giving him trouble, would never again go back to his desk at the State Department. The speculation on the successor, in consequence, had been incessant. Now the voices are stilled. The President has appointed Mr. Dean Acheson, Mr. Marshall's first Undersecretary. In the few months of their association, a close attachment sprang up between them. He was doubtless Mr. Marshall's own recommendation. Mr. Acheson must likewise have been in the forefront of the President's own mind, and, if he consulted Chief Justice Vinson's, in his, too. It was on the Chief Justice's recommendation, at any rate, that Mr. Acheson returned to public life in 1945 as Undersecretary of State.

Of first importance is the revelation that this appointment affords of what is in the President's mind. He has lately been accused of seeking a soft peace in the Cold War with Soviet Russia. Some color to the rumors was afforded by his recent speech in Kansas City in which he talked of a peace party in the Politburo. It is plain nowadays that Mr. Truman in a self-indulgent moment was simply taking a header into psychological warfare. If there were no other evidence, this appointment would be proof of the President's levelheadedness, for Mr. Acheson is no advocate of a soft peace. On the contrary, he is a realist.

Indeed, Mr. Acheson was the first high official of this Government publicly to denounce Soviet expansionism. This he did on February 10, 1947, in a statement to the Senate that "the Russian foreign policy is an aggressive and expanding one," a statement that created a furor of Muscovite protests. At the time the rebuke was thought to be both daring and undiplomatic. [Nowadays the name-calling that is indulged in makes the Acheson observation look pallid. Only yesterday Mr. Paul Hoffman referred to "the gang in the Politburo."] Not that Mr. Acheson is a commiphobiac. He has too rich a mind and to keen a sense of statecraft to be extremist. Facts as well as his hopes command his respect, and, like Old Hickory at New Orleans, he can "elevate them guns a little lower" when realities require.

But there are extremists who remember Mr. Acheson to his discredit for his work in laying the foundations of world cooperation. In our opinion, his achievements in this respect are salient evidences of stature. Perhaps the most outstanding task he undertook in this field was his joint parentage of the plan for world control of atomic energy. The American conscience is clearer because of the joint enterprises he helped to promote and organize. Mr. Acheson was equally in the van when one world disintegrated into two. He insisted on the demobilization of UNRRA when UNRRA was abused by the Soviet world at America's expense and turned into an operation rathole. He became the spearhead of both the Truman Doctrine and the Marshall Plan. When the British decided to quit Greece, a vacuum had to be filled, and no executive official can have worked harder than Mr. Acheson did to persuade Congress of the necessity for a containment policy in the Aegean. For that performance his stock in Congress rose high. His is the type of mind that is essentially constructive, and he rang the bell for the Marshall Plan in a speech he gave for the President at Cleveland, Miss., May 8, 1947. This prepared the world for the June 5 initiative of Secretary Marshall at Harvard.

With Mr. James E. Webb as Undersecretary, we may now look forward to a strengthening and stabilization of the State Department. Mr. Acheson is a firm believer in the thesis that a Secretary of State should remain at the helm in Washington. With Mr. Webb, who has made a big impression for administrative ability at the Bureau of the Budget, the disintegration arising from the repeated absences of the Secretary and much of the State Department staff should now be arrested. The department is on the front line of defense and offense in the cold war with Soviet Russia. It must be a tightly knit organization for its great task. If Mr. Acheson can instill in it what he once called a recognition in day-by-day administration "all our lives" of "the danger, the uncertainty, the need for alertness, for effort, and for discipline," he will become a man of history.

Stop-Watch War

When the delegates and staff of the American delegation came back from the U. N. meetings in Paris, they were of one mind about the probability that peace would soon return to the Holy Land, provided that there was no foolhardiness. The reason lay not so much in what was done in the United Nations as in the general desire for peace in the Middle East. However, within a few days such a prospect became clouded, the result of a general rash of foolhardiness, with Britain, Egypt and Israel all participating. Now the possibility of an extension of conflict seems to have ended by Egypt's acceptance of a cease-fire without reservations.

What seems to have happened is that the continued refusal of Egypt to end the stalemate, coupled with the Egyptian bombing of Tel Aviv and Jerusalem, persuaded Israel to uproot the Egyptian bases at El Arish and Rafah, on the Egyptian-Negev frontier. In this they have been successful. But the thrust took the Israeli troops into Egyptian territory, and this alarmed the British lest the Egyptians invoke a treaty that they had already denounced. On August 22, 1947, the late Nokrashy Pasha, then engaged in a dispute with the British over the Sudan, declared "That treaty has been so disintegrated by events that it can no longer serve as a foundation for friendly relations." But Mr. Bevin, with his treaty mania with the Arab world, doubtless hoped that events might restore its validity, and, to be in readiness, posted British troops to Aqaba, on the Red Sea. Egypt, however, seemingly had had enough, for the internal situation in Egypt is becoming precarious.

All this foolhardiness might have been averted at the last meeting of the General Assembly. An order to the protagonists to negotiate with the aid of the Conciliation Commission, which still has to be assembled, could possibly have been the deux ex machina. Now that the quarrel seems to be petering out, the armistice must be credited to superior power, not to the United Nations. Indeed, it is painful to see the abuse of the United Nations that this and other affairs of recent years have promoted. Bad enough to have all international, quasi-international and even internal arguments dumped on the United Nations in a way that puts disputes, big and little, on a world stage and strains the loyalty to U. N. decisions of public opinion. Worse to see the United Nations go out on a limb with edicts which everybody knows ahead of time have no chance of being obeyed. Even worse is to see the world body, given a great opportunity to knock heads together when they are inviting this procedure, suffer an adulteration of its authority and the sapping of the prestige on which its influence depends by ducking that opportunity. This is the case in the Middle East.

The Economic Report

The comprehensive annual economic report of the President's Council of Economic Advisers will bear careful study. For the report supplies the facts and analyses on which the President's recommendations for legislation have been largely based. A good many people appear to have forgotten that in 1946 Congress passed a law popularly known as the Full Employment Act, having as its objective the attainment of "maximum employment, production, and purchasing power." The function assigned the council created by that law is to advise the President as to ways and means of achieving these ends. Original predictions that it would be an innocuous body without influence have not been fulfilled. Instead, it has gained the ear of the President and has come to play an increasingly important part in the molding of Administration policies.

If the council report had been available before the President delivered his opening address to Congress, the reason for his reiterated call for legislative anti-inflation control measures would have been better understood. For the President has proceeded on the assumption, which the council's report supports, that inflationary pressures are still in the ascendant. In spite of a major improvement in the supply situation and a "slight downward movement in the cost of living," the report concludes that "stabilization policy for the immediate future is still concerned mainly with restraining inflationary forces, breaking bottlenecks and selectively adjusting the markets and prices of some commodities." Although that conclusion would be challenged by many business analysts, its acceptance by the President provides a comprehensive explanation of his price and production control program and his demand for higher taxes. It even buttresses presidential requests for immediate expansion of social security programs, since the first effect of an extension of social security would be an addition to payroll tax contributions, as the council report points out, which would restrain inflationary pressures.

Figuring prominently as a possible cause of renewed inflation, in the opinion of the council, is Government spending. The report notes that enlarged expenditures for national security and foreign aid "will impinge in 1949 upon an economy still sensitive to inflationary pressures," and the impact will be intensified in certain critical areas. Moreover, State and local government expenditures are rising rapidly, with the result that total cash payments by Federal, State and local governments may reach 61 billion dollars this year, more than nine billion dollars higher than in 1948. During the past year, moreover, Federal cash surpluses were greatly reduced by the cut in income taxes. As a result, unless new tax measures are adopted, the council states, one of the chief means of combating inflation will disappear. Hence the conclusion that new taxes to yield at least four billion dollars are needed to cover a probable deficit and to provide a budgetary surplus for debt retirement. The President's tax recommendations follow along the lines suggested by the council, although he was less positive about the need for increasing income taxes in the middle and upper brackets, and made no mention of the council's warning that further substantial increases in defense and military aid budgets would call for increases in personal income taxes in all brackets.

A cursory review of a few of the high spots in the council's report fails to do it justice. But it does at least show that the President's program is based on expert analysis of economic conditions and prospects by advisers with a reputation for conservatism whose chief aim is to stabilize the economy of free enterprise. There is nothing revolutionary, nor even radical, in requests to extend existing emergency controls and to authorize resort to mandatory controls over allocation and prices of scarce commodities, to be employed only if needed. And in calling during prosperous times for additional taxes to balance the budget and retire debt and for a tightening of credit controls, the council and the President are following a highly orthodox procedure that should enlist the support of conservative legislators.

Tactical Air Power

Homesteader's letter of December 28 would carry more weight if it did not reveal a deep ignorance of the proper use of the various components of air power. There are two main types of air power. One is tactical, used against the military forces of the enemy and their transportation, in direct support of our own military operations. The other is strategic, having no immediate military objective but destroying the long-term military capabilities of an enemy.

Carrier air power in World War II was ordinarily used tactically (the Doolittle raid was an outstanding exception) against the enemy forces threatening our own operations. This often brought carriers up against concentrations of enemy air power greater than that in the Japanese home islands—e. g., in the invasion of the Philippines. Their relative invulnerability in the latter phases of the Pacific war was the result of skillful and aggressive handling, not of running away from danger.

Carriers did not operate against Germany, because an excellent land-based air force was available within easy reach of the targets, in Great Britain, Italy, and Africa. They did, however, protect the convoys that supplied that Air Force. Moreover, carrier availability in force might have saved Norway, which was lost for want of tactical air support. Before land bases were available in Africa, an outstanding carrier operation was the relief of Malta by the "Wasp"—a feat which land-based aviation could not accomplish.

As for solving the problems of bombing Japan, the primary problem of the Air Force was to obtain and supply bases within reach of Japan, which was done by the Navy using naval air power.

It is frequently overlooked that the tactical air forces were a mighty factor in the European victory—per ton of bombs dropped, they probably did more effective damage than their comrades in the more publicized strategic arm. In fact, as the Strategic Bombing Survey has reported, some of the greatest accomplishments of the strategic bombers were in tactical tasks, such as the transportation attack in support of the Normandy landings. The destruction of German fighters in repelling the strategic attacks had the tactical significance of securing air superiority.

The real problem of air power in any given situation is to find the most economical method of producing a given amount of destruction of the enemy, not the most spectacular way.

Civil Service Democracy

President Harry B. Mitchell of the Civil Service Commission, in his letter published December 31, takes pains to point out that there is a great deal of excellent work done in civil service. This is, of course, true. It is also true that in addition to excellent, average, and mildly fair accomplishments, civil service puts up with a certain amount of unpardonably poor work.

Mr. Mitchell correlates quality of personnel with attractiveness of salaries. Federal salaries in the higher brackets are altogether unsatisfactory and ought to be speedily and generously increased. Yet in connection with the discrepancy between top salaries paid in civil service and by industry, objective consideration should be given not only to the material, but also to the moral, implications.

It is definitely civil service and not private industry that expresses the democratic, and therefore moral, wage policy, which is this: Salaries should be good and grow increasingly better for everybody; but there should exist no dizzily high salaries resulting in an undemocratic differential of incomes.

In addition to a democratic wage policy, civil service can also boast of a democratic leave policy, i. e., equal number of days of leave for everybody. Considering customs in private industry, one may even quote the fact that civil service workers, high and low alike, use the same cafeterias and the same elevators as an affirmation of democracy.

But whereas civil service has succeeded in preventing the emergence of an overprivileged class of Federal workers, it must accept the blame of having created a caste of underprivileged in its midst. I refer here to the temporary indefinite employes. For a whole year they are at the complete, theoretically unrestricted mercy of the supervisor. They can be dismissed at a day's notice. Any reason given by the supervisor for the dismissal will hold. The employe has no possibility of obtaining a hearing in which to plead his case.

Mr. Mitchell ought to see that temporary indefinite employes are given the same rights and privileges concerning redress of grievances as any employe with permanent status. The temporary indefinite workers are the ones that need protection most.

Romanian Tyranny

New Year's Day marked the first anniversary of tyranny in the Peoples' Republic of Romania. Capacity crowds in all Romanian churches in this country voiced special prayers for a speedy deliverance of the Romanian nation from the yoke of communism, noting that it was just a year ago that the so-called "Peoples' Republic of Romania" was established.

The Very Rev. Jon Trutza of Cleveland, president of the Romanian Orthodox Episcopate of America, sent the following telegram to all the parishes of his jurisdiction: "Please add to the religious services on New Year's Day special prayers for the peace of the world for the triumph of true democracy and for the liberation of the Romanian people from Communist slavery."

The Rev. Father John Spatariu of Youngstown, president of the Association of Romanian Catholics of America, addressed the following telegram: "One year ago the People's Republic of Romania was established by a band of traitors and one further step was taken toward the complete enslavement of the Romanian nation. As free American citizens of Romanian origin you are requested to offer publicly in church on New Year's Day prayers for peace, democracy and the deliverance of the Romanian nation from tyrannical yoke of communism."

Ghettoized Housing

In Maj. Gen. Ulysses S. Grant's criticism of the recent report on segregation in Washington, the Federation of Civic Associations' committee spokesman is blamed for preventing a $3,400,000 grant to acquire land in the far Northeast section of the District, known as Marshall Heights and Barry Farms, for redevelopment under the Eminent Domain Act, to rehouse the citizens formed to move from the Northwest central area, earmarked for redevelopment.

General Grant designates as a "false and vicious rumor that a ghetto is being established for the colored population in the far Northeast of Washington."

To the contrary, in the 1948 congressional hearing, we find General Grant in his plea for a $3,400,000 appropriation for the redevelopment of Marshall Heights and Barry Farms, testify that these two areas will rehouse approximately 16,000 displaced persons from the Northwest central area. These redevelopments in the far Northeast are designed for colored occupancy.

The Federation of Civic Associations, composed of 27 member bodies, stated its position before Senator Reed's Subcommittee on appropriations, declaring that the association backs any just and fair movement to rid the city of unsightly substandard dwellings. At the same time the federation urged that before the 20 million dollars or the initial sum of $3,500,000 be appropriated, that the commission produce the master plan showing the over-all redevelopment pattern for the District.

Under the District of Columbia Redevelopment Act, General Grant's commission is all powerful. The commission, under the law of eminent domain, may seize property in any section of the District, evacuate the residents, demolish whole areas, relocate streets, public spaces and buildings, then may sell, grant or lease the land as an entirety to a redevelopment company, a partnership or an individual for less than paid the original owners. General Grant now states that it will be the policy of the commission to give preference in new dwellings to the present occupants of the area.

General Grant declares that racial covenants are things of the past and terms the statement that "the Negro has lost his American rights to live anywhere in town is egregiously in error." Yet, as chairman of the National Park and Planning Commission, he must plead guilty of planned racial segregation as scores of dwellings have been erected by his agency for low-income families and have been (and still are), despite the Supreme Court covenant ruling, segregated for white and colored occupancy.

Since the congressional committee, after hearing nine spokesmen argue in favor of the appropriation, then fully agreed with us that the master plan must first be produced, we regretfully conclude that the reference "height of folly and bad judgment" must also apply to those who agreed with us. We are fully in accord with the Slum Clearance Act, and to avoid unnecessary delay, unsuccessfully petitioned the last Congress to grant $50,000 to complete and publish the "master plan" showing land use for various types of dwelling and the location of public housing for the lower salaried 20 per cent group.

Inside U. S. Homes

By Malvina Lindsay

Hearthside Picture

THE MANY foreign visitors who are curious about the home life of what they call the "average American family" should be advised not to take too literally the standard household scene presented in magazine advertisements. For the recent sample survey of American households made by the Census Bureau points up a difference, in human factors at least, between the real and the ideal.

The two inevitable fresh-cheeked, immaculate children, a boy and a girl, might be in evidence—although to be strictly statistical, the average size of the survey family was 3.6 persons. Yet nearly half of American families have no children under 18 living with them, which shows the high proportion of middle-aged and elderly people in the population. And nearly one sixth of present families have women heads.

To get back to the typical American family—father's hair is receding to a greater extent than in the picture and his girth is wider. For his median age is 45 years. And blow though this may be to idealistic romance, the chances are one in seven that either he or mother has been married previously. Also in about one eighth of the homes there is another family living doubled up with the happy group that is pictured inspecting the new motorcar or television set.

PROBABLY the greatest change taking place in the standard household picture is that the mother is increasingly absent in daytime. For married women now outnumber single women in the labor force, and in husband and wife households more than one fifth of wives are employed.

Many Americans will be surprised to find the average household in the survey so small in number. The boom in births in recent years had given the impression that American families were getting larger. But the chief reason more babies were born was that more people were marrying.

It would seem from present trends that a large number of families with two or at most three children was in the making. Some population experts regard this as the best way of building citizenry as it gives children more attention and opportunity. And alarm over the large number of married women working has been lessened by a Census Bureau report that shows mothers of preschool children tend to remain in the home. The United States Women's Bureau reports that recent increases of women workers have been chiefly among women past 35 years.

One phase of American home life the Census Bureau's report did not go into was the extent to which the machine has taken over in the household. That would likely interest foreign observers most, as they usually regard gadgets as the badge of American civilization.

RALPH RAIKES of Lincoln, Nebr., one of 25 farmers who toured Europe observing the Marshall Plan at work, said recently on his return that a century of mechanical progress separated the American farm home from the European one. He pointed out that the American woman, especially on the farm, was able to do her own work and have some leisure besides by reason of her "kitchen full of machines and her deep freeze in the cellar." But many a European farm wife, he observed, spent her entire time working with the crude tools her grandmother used.

While many American homes are not well equipped with kitchen machines, yet even in the poorest there is usually a radio—and often a motor car in the yard or the alley. And household machines are numerous enough to be largely setting the pattern of family change in this country—just as they are now initiating political revolution among the former submerged peoples of the world.

In the United States they are behind the increasing number of working wives—that is, those employed outside the home. They are also making households smaller as they take over the functions formerly performed by daughters, sons, aunts, grandmothers — who now must find other jobs and other homes. They make possible comforts, leisure, entertainment. They also have some ill effects—as foreign observers may be quick to note—in the softening of human fiber and the decline of creative household activities. But they have shaped a hearthside picture to which most of the world is aspiring.

Knowledge Of Russia

According to the "Red" dean of Canterbury, we may now hold our heads up because he has told us that the Russians do not wish war!

As a matter of fact, most all Americans except some of our officials have known right along that the Russians do not desire war so long as they can obtain what they wish without strife.

Our present international troubles are simply the outgrowth of lack of knowledge of the Soviet mind and aims and political ineptitude over the past 15 years. With the exercise of just a little courage by us in the maintenance of a highway for convoys to and from Berlin a year ago, we would not now be saddled with the expense of airlift transportation.

Washington Calling

By Marquis Childs

Acheson And Webb

THE STAFF planning leading up to the appointment of Dean Acheson to be Secretary of State and James E. Webb to be Undersecretary gives some justification to talk of a "new Truman Administration." It is not merely that new faces have been added.

Childs

The whole approach to the State Department and the issues of foreign policy, brought to the fore by Secretary of State Marshall's enforced resignation, was carefully thought out and the choices deliberately made. The goal, particularly as reflected in the selection of Webb, is to reshape the State Department as an instrument of foreign policy.

Webb will step into the department without any prior prejudices or convictions and the President intends to back him to the limit in the changes he considers essential. As it was phrased when the White House was planning the appointment, Webb has no "entangling alliances" within the department which might hamper him.

With respect to Acheson there will certainly be an opposition and a noisy one if only from such personal antagonists as Senator Kenneth Wherry of Nebraska who frequently in the past made Acheson a whipping boy. The opposition is not, however, likely to cause the Administration any serious embarrassment.

THIS phase of the appointment, too, was thoroughly considered in advance. The White House staff discussed with Acheson his relationship with Alger Hiss and Donald Hiss, brother of the former State Department assistant charged with perjury in connection with confidential documents removed from department files.

Donald Hiss is a partner in the large law firm of which Acheson is a partner and which he will leave to become Secretary. The White House was satisfied that not a single scintilla of evidence developed by the House Un-American Activities Committee touched Donald Hiss.

Moreover, whatever the outcome of the case against Alger—it will not come to trial until late in February—the White House was convinced that his role in the State Department had been greatly exaggerated in the reckless publicity growing out of the House inquiry. Part of this recklessness was the effort to smear Donald Hiss in the technique of guilt by association.

There have been efforts to make it seem as though Alger Hiss, who was present as a technical adviser at the Yalta conference with the Russians, actually played a leading role in advising Roosevelt to make major compromises with Stalin. It is intimated that he sat at the elbow of the ailing Roosevelt and influenced his decisions.

This is malicious fantasy. From one of those present at the conference, anyone with no political ax to grind, I have learned that at Yalta Alger Hiss saw Roosevelt perhaps once or twice and then only with a number of others in a conference of the United States delegation.

Acheson worked with Alger as he worked with other technical assistants in the department. He admired his efficiency and his intellectual capacity.

ONE THING that pleases the White House is that there were no last minute leaks. They were carefully guarded against. At 10:15, with his press conference due to assemble in a quarter of an hour, the President telephoned Democratic and Republican leaders on Capitol Hill. Most of the speculation had centered on Chief Justice Fred Vinson.

The President could not reach Senator Arthur Vandenberg, now ranking minority member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, because Vandenberg had been called to New York by his wife's illness. From the Republican perspective the appointment is a controversial one; only less controversial than if the appointee had been Justice William O. Douglas who was also rumored as a possibility.

But therein lies the chief significance of Acheson's appointment, politically speaking. If Marshall had suffered his illness and operation a year ago, then the President would have had to placate the Republican majority in the Senate with a "non-controversial" nomination.

That is not true today. The action of the Democratic majority in the Senate in reducing the number of Republicans on the Foreign Relations Committee may, it seems to me, properly be considered a violation of the bipartisan approach to foreign policy. It can hardly be argued, however, that bipartisanship should apply in the naming of a Secretary of State who will be a member of the President's intimate, official family.

The New Society

Truman's Message And Roosevelt's

ABOUT President Truman's State of the Union address to Congress, one broad generalization can be made. At no time in our history, unless possibly in some early Presidency when we were intent upon a new system of government we had then recently adopted—at no time since has any State of the Union message to Congress by any President devoted itself so primarily to a new concept of society. Most of our Presidents would have been shocked by Mr. Truman's phrase, "creating a society."

Sullivan

As soon as the details of the concept in Mr. Truman's message are all grasped, and the pattern that several of his proposals make is recognized, discussion by the public and debate in Congress will be controversial and prolonged, in proportion as the concept is fundamental and far-reaching. The word "revolutionary" is frequently misused and in general overused. This is one place where it belongs.

One aspect of the President's message is not disputed, and on the contrary is agreed upon by partisans and opponents alike. This is the relation of the Truman message to the Roosevelt New Deal. About this, partisans of the Truman message and of the New Deal exult with pride. To opponents it is reason for denunciation. But both agree that Mr. Truman goes further than Roosevelt, that the Truman message is a resumption of the New Deal and expansion of it.

A way of expressing it, used by both sides, is, "the Truman message begins where the New Deal left off." The relation between the Truman message and the New Deal brings up the next stage and the conclusive one, what Congress will do about the Truman message. Bearing on that there is a precedent. And between that precedent and the present situation is a parallel, which may throw light on what may have moved Mr. Truman to send the particular kind of message he did, and on what Congress will do about it.

IN TIME, the place where the New Deal left off was mid-1937. In February that year Roosevelt sent to Congress a measure soon recognized as extraordinary, a climax going beyond any New Deal measure before. This was the bill to add six justices to the Supreme Court and otherwise change the judicial system. The measure, after six months of tense debate, was rejected by Congress.

With that rejection Congress reversed its whole attitude toward Roosevelt. Up to then it had been willingly a "rubber stamp" Congress, passing measures sent to it by Roosevelt with little debate, on occasion none.

After the "court packing" bill, as it came to be called, Congress became wary, conscious of its legislative responsibility. Roosevelt recognized the change. From mid-1937 on he was cautious about sending measures to Congress and no New Deal legislation of any consequence was enacted.

Between that 1937 message of Roosevelt and the present message of Mr. Truman's, there is a partial parallel, inherent in the respective circumstances of the two occasions. Roosevelt had just completed his first term. Mr. Truman has just completed his. Roosevelt, three months before, in the presidential election of 1936, had won a sensational victory, justifying elation and self-confidence about his standing with the country and Congress. Mr. Truman, two months ago, won a substantial victory and was naturally and plainly elated.

BUT HERE the parallel changes. The sensational quality of Roosevelt's 1936 victory arose from the enormous and unprecedented immensity of it—he had carried all but two States. What made Mr. Truman's victory last fall sensational was the narrowness of it, the escape by a squeak from generally expected defeat.

The Congress Roosevelt had when he sent his Supreme Court message was overwhelmingly Democratic, unprecedentedly so—in the Senate, 75 Democrats out of 96; in the House, 333 out of 431. In the Congress Mr. Truman relies on, the Democratic majority is only ordinary, in the Senate comparatively narrow—54 Senators out of 96; in the House, 262 out of 431.

Mr. Truman has one advantage over Roosevelt in 1937. The message Roosevelt sent asked for a single measure, its extraordinary quality easily recognizable. Mr. Truman's message is diffuse and complex, calling for a score of measures, only a part of them recognizable as extreme. Much depends on whether Congress and the public see the message as a whole, see the patern that part of it makes.

It is certainly possible that Congress may react with consciousness of its legislative prerogatives, and that many Democrats may do what leading ones did about the Roosevelt Supreme Court measure, depart from presidential party leadership on what they regard as a fundamental issue.

The Gallup Poll

One in 7 in United States Going Hungry, Survey Finds

By George Gallup

Director American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 7.—1948 was a year of high prosperity, but approximately one person in every seven in this land of plenty failed to get enough to eat, according to a coast-to-coast survey by the Institute.

The survey findings form a grim reminder that poverty and hunger are permanent guests in our land, boom times or bad.

As the old year came to a close, 3100 persons constituting a cross-section of all walks of life were questioned as follows in the survey:

"During the past year, have you or your family felt, at any time, that you could not get enough to eat?"

The results are:

Yes	14%
No	86

High prices that accompany prosperity are undoubtedly important contributing factors. The food bill of the average family has more than doubled in the past six years, a survey by the Institute last July found.

The plight of the family whose income is the same as six years ago, or less, is obvious. It must skimp on something to make ends meet and apparently many are skimping on food.

People living in farm areas and in small towns seem to be better off in ability to get enough to eat than residents of big cities. The highest percentage of people who say there were times during 1948 when they felt they could not get enough to eat is found (1) in cities of 500,000 or more population, (2) among manual workers, and (3) among the older age groups, particularly those over 50.

This is shown in the following table of results by occupation, size of community and age:

By Occupation	Yes	No
Professional and bus.	8%	92%
White collar	10	90
Farmers	10	90
Manual workers	17	83
By Community Size
Farm	10	90
Under 10,000	13	87
10,000-100,000	12	88
100,000-500,000	12	88
500,000 and over	18	82
By Age
21-29	10	90
30-49	13	87
50 and over	17	83

A definite correlation was found between amount of education and ability to provide for oneself and family.

Among people who have had some college education the survey found only 8 per cent saying there had been times without enough food, as compared to 11 per cent among those who had a high school education only, and 18 per cent among those who had only grade school training or no schooling.

British Voters Found Cool To Steel Nationalization

The Attlee government's plan to nationalize Britain's iron and steel industry meets with less favor from the public than some of its other actions.

A cross-section survey by the British Institute of Public Opinion shows the following:

"Do you approve or disapprove of the Government's intention to nationalize the iron and steel industry?"

	Today	Year Ago
Approve	24%	31%
Disapprove	44	36
No opinion	32	33

The bill to nationalize iron and steel has passed its second reading in the House of Commons but faces difficulties in the House of Lords.

The public attitude toward the bill is in sharp contrast to attitudes on other nationalization steps, notably the nationalizing of health services. Last month the British Institute reported that the public rated Britain's national health plan, put into effect last year, "the best thing the Government has done since it came into office in 1945."

Merger Order Is Defied by UFEW Union

Chicago, Jan. 7 (AP).—Grant Oakes, president of the CIO-United Farm Equipment Workers' Union, today rejected as "a Pearl Harbor ultimatium" CIO orders that his union merge with the CIO-United Automobile Workers.

Oakes appeared briefly before a special three-man committee of CIO officials headed by Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers of America, and read a prepared statement.

Rieve's committee was appointed at the recent CIO convention at Portland, Oreg., to negotiate the merger, ordered by the convention.

Carries No Status, He Says

"Your committee carries absolutely no status with our organization," Oakes told the CIO leaders. "I appear here only out of common courtesy to individual officers of CIO affiliates."

"Our local unions have indorsed a forthright rejection of any and all Pearl Harbor ultimatums to disband our union," Oakes said.

"You will recall that our decision was to refer major issues of policy to FE's highest body, a regular convention of democratically elected delegates assembled at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, March 25, 26 and 27.

"This position has the wholehearted and independent support of our membership."

Forbidden to Discuss It

Oakes said the UFEW's membership felt "profound indignation" over the CIO "attack on autonomy of international unions." He said his union's membership had "specifically forbidden me to discuss this or any other matter with you. I am happy to comply with their wishes."

Oakes said that the UFEW has planned a full agenda of business for the Cedar Rapids convention "and we shall not be sidetracked by union-wrecking vendettas."

Rieve told reporters that "the Oakes statement was full of misrepresentations, and it was not the purpose of this committee or the CIO to disband the UFEW as Oakes said.

"We had hoped to meet mutual agreement for binding the two groups."

Rieve said his committee will report to the CIO executive board at Washington January 26. A 60-day time limit set by the CIO convention for the union merger expires January 25.

By The Associated Press

President Truman said yesterday that it is up to Congress to work out the method of putting into effect the labor law changes he has asked.

Mr. Truman asked in his state of the Union message Wednesday for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and reenactment of the Wagner labor relations law with some modifications. Administration supporters in Congress are divided on the question whether that should be done in one bill, or in two or more.

A reporter sought Mr. Truman's view on that question at the President's news conference yesterday. He asked whether Mr. Truman wanted his labor recommendations, including a rise in the minimum wage from 40 to 75 cents an hour, handled in one omnibus bill or separately.

Will Wait and See

The Chief Executive said that he had made his position clear on the need, that the problem of how to meet it was up to Congress. He said he would wait and see what Congress did.

Capitol Hill dispute has revolved chiefly about a bill by Senator Elbert Thomas (D., Utah) to shatter the Taft-Hartley law and restore the original Wagner Act.

Senator Ives (R., N. Y.) criticized the bill. He said in an interview that if it reaches the Senate floor, many Taft-Hartley features will be added in the form of amendments.

Ives favors removing the Taft-Hartley law in its present form, but also favors the simultaneous passage of a new law keeping some Taft-Hartley provisions. Some Democratic leaders in Congress agree with this approach.

Confident of Passage

On the other hand, Arthur Goldberg, general counse' of the CIO, told a reporter:

"We feel confident the Thomas bill will pass. Our survey of Congress shows it can be enacted speedily. It is a practical approach. It is what the people voted for."

Several other bills to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act have been introduced this week, but Thomas' was the most important because he is chairman of the Senate Labor Committee.

Thomas acknowledged in a Senate speech Thursday that further labor legislation is "called for"—beyond the mere restoration of the Wagner Act. But he didn't call for it in the bill he introduced.

As chairman of the National Defense Research Committee, Dr. Conant led wartime atomic research from its first laboratory demonstration to its climax at Hiroshima. Later he was a member of the scientific advisory committee of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Conant's discussion, reprinted from The Atlantic Monthly, may reverse some basic ideas you've had on these important issues. His estimate of our tremendous assignment, his guess about Kremlin strategy, and his warning of the risks ahead make timely, thoughtful reading for every U. S. citizen. See Section II tomorrow.

Stockholders Of 12 Banks Meet Tuesday

By S. Oliver Goodman

Stockholders of 12 Washington banks will meet Tuesday to elect directors and hear results of the past year's operations. In some cases, directors will also meet and officers will be chosen.

Generally, the reports will be highly satisfactory. At the end of 1948, business loans of the 17 local members of the Federal Reserve System totaled $231,590,000, a gain of about 25 million over 1947. Interest rates also were slightly better.

Local institutions scheduled to hold annual meetings on Tuesday include: Anacostia National Bank, Hamilton National Bank, Lincoln National Bank, McLachlen Banking Corp., National Bank of Washington, National Capital Bank, National Metropolitan Bank, National Savings & Trust Co., Riggs National Bank, Second National Bank, Security Savings & Commercial Bank, Union Trust Co. and Washington Loan & Trust Co.

WHO'S WHO TODAY: Dr. James H. Wakelin has accepted the post of associate director of research for the Textile Research Institute and the Textile Foundation. He will assume the new duties in Princeton, N. J., on February 1. Wakelin, then a lieutenant commander, left active service in the Navy in 1946. He participated in the organization of a group of scientists into what later became the Washington laboratories of Engineering Research Associates, Inc. He served as research director for that organization for the past year.

STORE SALES OFF: Washington department store sales in the week ended January 1 dropped 5 per cent as compared with the same 1948 period, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported yesterday. Cumulative sales for the four weeks ended January 1 (including Christmas volume) advanced 10 per cent over the same period of the previous year. Regionally, store sales in the Fifth Reserve District dropped 10 per cent for the week, but were up 7 per cent for the four-week period.

CONFIRMATION: Reports that Capital Airlines will pay off interest arrears for two years on its debentures were confirmed yesterday by President J. A. Carmichael. He announced that the company, formerly known as Pennsylvania-Central, had deposited $861,875 with Manufacturers Trust Co. of New York to cover payment of deferred interest coupons for 1947 and 1948 and to meet the coupon due April 1. The interest payments, to be made April 1, amount to $87.50 for each $1000 bond. The securities are 15-year, 3½ per cent convertible income debentures due in 1960.

DOUBLED NET: The Federal Reserve banks earned 304 million dollars during 1948, an increase of 146 million dollars over 1947, the Federal Reserve Board reported. The near-doubling of earnings was due principally to the higher average rate of interest on Government securities system, the board said.

PERSPECTIVE: Although an increasing number of soft spots are appearing in the economy, it is important to maintain perspective, Standard & Poor's states, adding: "We have become so used to the establishment of successive new peaks in the various business and economic indexes that there is the natural tendency to become unduly pessimistic once the rising trends are checked. All that is really happening is that the economy is beginning to return to normalcy, accompanied by a return of seasonal patterns and keener trade rivalry. Granted that the boom is flattening out, all evidence points to only a moderate decline in business activity and profits in 1949. Any recession promises to be comparatively slight, still providing a degree of prosperity that seemed unattainable before the war."

SEARS SALES: Sears, Roebuck & Co. reported December sales of $280,640,809, an increase of 4.9 per cent over sales of $267,572,523 in December, 1947. For the 11 months ended December 31, 1948, sales totaled $2,261,140,775, up 15.6 per cent from $1,955,792,524 in the like 1947 period.

EARNINGS: Armour & Co., the Nation's second largest meat packing and food processing firm, reported a net loss of $1,965,291 in the fiscal year ended October 30, 1948. This compared with net earnings of $30,907,658 in the previous year, equal to $4.91 a common share. Other income statements:

New York Cotton

New York, Jan. 7 (AP).—Cotton futures moved lower today under light but persistent pressure of hedge selling and liquidation. Final prices were off 30 to 80 cents a bale and at the lows for the day.

Uncertainty over congressional action on the farm program and ECA funds for cotton created some hesitancy among traders. Producers sold cotton more freely in the primary markets with a consequent increase in hedge-selling which discouraged rallying tendencies.

More Stars Listed For Inaugural Gala

Three widely known groups of entertainers yesterday were added to the list of professionals who will appear at the 1949 Inaugural Gala at the National Guard Armory the night of January 19.

The motion picture comedy stars, Bud Abbott and Lou Costello, the dancing team of Tony and Sally de Marco, and the 125-voice chorus of the Society for the Preservation of Barber Shop Quartet Singing have been engaged for the occasion, according to Carter Barron, chairman of the parade and special events committee of the inaugural.

They will join other stars of radio, stage and screen who will entertain President Truman and guests of the gala. Already booked to appear are George Jessel, Gene Kelly, Kay Starr, Jane Powell, Lawrence Tibbett, Ferruccio Togliavini, Dorothy Maynor and Lucy Monroe.

Thirty-six locations for food concession stands along the inaugural parade route were approved yesterday, according to Richard Mansfield, concessions committee chairman.

He said 30 of the stands will be specially built for inaugural use, and six will be mobile units mounted on trucks. They will operate only on January 20, between 6 a. m. and 6 p. m.

For the Inaugural Ball that night, a semicircular arrangement of 116 opera-style boxes will face the National Guard Armory theatrical stage, which will measure 40 by 46 feet.

The boxes are 6 by 8 feet wide, to accommodate eight persons each. They will be trimmed in royal blue fabric on chromium uprights and crossbars.

Daughter 'Critical'

Father Hurls Son, Himself To Deaths

New York, Jan. 7 (U.P.).—A father took his 6-year-old son and 4-year-old daughter to church today and knelt with them before the altar. Twenty minutes later he threw the two children off a 150-foot bridge and jumped after them.

Gabriel Nicoletti, 37, and his boy, Arthur, were killed. The little girl, Gabrielle Claire, is near death in a hospital.

Motorists stepped on their brakes on the busy Kosciusko Bridge, linking Brooklyn and Queens Boroughs, when they saw the man throw the boy over the railing. Before they could act, Nicoletti had raised the girl in his arms, dropped her and then leaped over the railing himself.

The Rev. Harold Buetow, a priest, was called to administer last rites. He revealed that the father and children had been in St. Cecilia's Church less than half an hour before.

The father had patiently shown the little girl how to kneel, Father Buetow said, and shown her the Christmas manger which still stood before the altar. They stayed only a short time, he said, and walked slowly from the church toward the bridge.

It was learned Nicoletti and his wife had quarreled recently, that she had left home but returned and tried to take the children.

Three Model Rail Systems Are Exhibited

Three model railway systems, complete with golden spikes, spurs, switches, tunnels and bridges were formally opened last night by the Metropolitan Society of Model Engineers at Union Station.

Build on a layout 22 feet wide and 17 feet long, the three systems use more than 500 feet of track, 52 switches and true-to-life scenery of quarries, culverts, oil derricks, lumber camps, mountain passes and small towns.

Golden spikes were driven for each of the three lines, the Metropolitan Eastern Railway, built to a scale of a quarter inch per foot, the Metropolitan Southern line built to a scale of one-eighth of an inch to a foot, and the Crown City Traction Co.'s elevated lines.

The golden spikes were small brass brads driven with tack hammers by B. R. Tolson, manager of the Washington Terminal, Col. C. H. Whitesell, Assistant Engineer Commissioner for the District, and Arthur Baker, assistant vice president in charge of traffic of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

The demonstration, open last night only to invited guests, was conducted by an operating crew of approximately 20 persons, equipped with sound-powered telephones and the familiar blue-and-white railroad engineer caps.

The exhibit, in Room 457, will be open to the public from 2 to 10 p. m. on January 8, 9, 15, 16, 22 and 23, and from 8 to 10 p. m. on January 14 and 21.

Tvery type of railroad equipment is meticulously reproduced in the model railroader's exhibit. Freight engines, both modern and ancient, whiz past streamlined Diesel engine passenger trains. Hills are climbed and switches operated at reckless speds and with the enthusiasm known only to the model railroad "bug."

Statehood for Hawaii, Alaska Again Backed

President Truman yesterday again voiced his support of Statehood for both Hawaii and Alaska.

He did so at a news conference, saying his position was covered in his state of the Union message.

A reporter said he could find nothing in the message on Statehood for Hawaii and Alaska.

Auto Crashes Into Window Of Apartment

A shiny new automobile plowed into the bay window of a Georgetown basement apartment early yesterday, badly scaring the tenant, a Greek Embassy official, and causing $1000 damage.

The accident abruptly ended a wild chase of John Hargrove, 24, 1230 29th st. nw.

Hargrove was fined $50 for reckless driving by Municipal Court Judge Armand W. Scott.

The chase started when police privates Richard F. Brown and Edwin A. O'Callaghan saw Hargrove going through a blinking light at 2 a. m. at Florida and Connecticut aves. nw. The car weaved from one side of the street to another, police said, at speeds up to 50 miles an hour.

Three motorcycle policemen joined the chase and then two headquarters cruisers and finally two more scout cars, before Hargrove lost control and slammed into the house at 3100 P st. nw., owned by Commander James G. Clark.

The basement apartment, occupied by John Phrantzes, a secretary at the Greek Embassy, had recently been done over in pine paneling according to Mrs. Clark. She described it as a "shambles."

Phrantzes said he had moved to Georgetown in search of quiet living quarters.

Truman Asks Repeal of Straus, Boke Ouster

President Truman asked Congress yesterday to repeal a requirement that Reclamation Commissioner Michael W. Straus and Richard L. Boke, California regional reclamation director, be ousted from office on January 31.

He made his request in a special message to the House. The President said the action of Congress last year in writing into the Interior Department's annual appropriation bill a provision that only engineers can serve in the two positions is "arbitrary and diametrically opposed to the principles on which this Government is founded."

Mr. Truman said the positions are administrative in character and do not require professional engineering experience.

Cathedral Mansions North Rent Hike Plan Under Study

Proposal for rent increases on 178 units of Cathedral Mansions North, at 3100 Connecticut ave. nw., was taken under advisement following a hearing yesterday morning by William F. Mansfield, a District rent examiner.

A hearing on a proposed rent increase on 75 units of the Manchester, 1426 M st. nw., also scheduled for Friday morning, was postponed to an unspecified date by Examiner James G. Tyson because of the illness of the petitioner, Miss Frances E. Hearn.

Present rents for the Manchester units range from $35 monthly for one room to $65 for two rooms; proposed rents are from $42.50 to $72.50.

In the Cathedral Mansions North case, the landlord, North Cathedral Mansions, Inc., presented figures on increased maintenance costs, and tenants testified services had been decreased. The landlord was given permission to present another statement on wages. Present rents vary from $32.50 monthly for one room to $72.50 for four rooms; proposed rents are from $35.39 to 78.95.

Police Seek Holdup Victim, 3 Assailants

The holdup robbery of Walter French Agee, 1930 K st. nw., Thurssday night at Riggs and Sargent rds., Chilium, Md., baffled Prince Georges County police yesterday.

In the first place, they were unable to locate Agee, himself, after the robbery was reported at 4 a. m. yesterday.

Information as to the assailants was also sketchy. Police knew there were three, driving a Chevrolet sedan. Two were blond, one was dark. One had a mole or a wart on his right cheek. All were in their early 20's, but there the information ends.

Agee originally told police he met the trio at the corner of 17th and K sts. nw. and was asked to go night-clubbing. They stopped once for gas at a station, where Agee said one of the assailants was recognized, and then drove to the spot where he was beaten and robbed.

Agee said he lost a watch, a ruby ring, and a wallet containing $29. The total loss was set at $149. The wallet has been recovered, minus the cash, by Prince Georges County police.

Liquor Store Holdup Arrest Solves Others

When police arrested Donald Wilson, 20, of 527 3d st. ne., late Thursday night, they knew they had the man who had stolen $116 from a southwest Washington liquor store a few minutes earlier, but yesterday they discovered they had solved four other holdups.

Wilson confessed to police he had made four armed robberies from December 11 through January 1. He needed the money to get married, he said, and was unable to get it any other way because of an injured back which prevented him from working.

He was held for grand jury action under $10,000 bond by Municipal Court Judge George D. Neilson.

Wilson was arrested when his victim, Alfred J. Consorti, 26, coowner of the liquor store at 221 4th st. sw., shadowed him after the robbery. Wilson was carying a 7.35-mm. loaded automatic when he was seized by police.

The stores Wilson told police he had robbed, with the dates and amount of money taken, are: A liquor store at 1203 H st. ne., December 11, $280; a frozen custard store at 1138 4th st. sw., $30, on December 13; a liquor store at 1741 Pennsylvania ave. nw., $60, on December 15, and another liquor store at 200 E st. ne., $104, on January 1.

Asked by police why he had not been active during the Christmas rush, Wilson told police he had taken Christmas off to go home to West Virginia.

Lorentz Tackles The Atom Bomb

By Richard L. Coe

PARE LORENTZ, who has a way of making uncomfortable subjects fascinating on celluloid, is about to tackle the most awkward of them all—the inexorable atomic bomb.

Lorentz and his associates have acquired Dr. David Bradley's book, "No Place to Hide," as the foundation for a film on which they've been working for some time. The original was to have been a short subject, "My Brother's Keeper," but Dr. Bradley's lucid volume inspired them to enlarge the plan into a feature film.

If, like this reporter, you've read "No Place to Hide," which was distributed on the Book of the Month Club's December double bill, along with the Eisenhower book, you know what an engrossing job Dr. Bradley has done. His reportage has some of the straightforward simplicity found in John Hersey's "Hiroshima," and the delayed effects of the Bikini tests make stirring four ayem reading.

Dr. Bradley, who served as radiological monitor at Bikini, the United World Federalists, the Emergency Committee of Atomic Scientists, headed by Dr. Albert Einstein, and Atlantic-Little Brown, publishers of the book, will collaborate on the film.

One thing you can count on from the man who gave us such long-lived strips as "The River," "The Plow that Broke the Plains" and "The Fight For Life" is that this film will have a quality of simplicity, an absence of the gosh-geewhiz atmosphere which characterized the only previous film on the subject "The Beginning or the End."

Exhibition a Problem

How it will fare, how it will be shown, whether it will find the general outlet such a picture should have is going to be a big problem. Commercial exhibitors are queasy about fact films—often bogged down with the description "documentary." The general movie-going public across the country is habitually reluctant when it comes to fact in the movies.

Which poses Lorentz and his associates the same problem faced by M-G-M, producers of "The Beginning or the End." This picture I criticized at the time for its sophomoric tone and insistence on some sort of a romantic angle. But to give the devil its due, this very approach did well in the vast stretches of audiences with which I have no personal acquaintance. Exhibitors reported that in many places it provoked great comment, although the familiar cry in favor of escapism also was generally raised.

So how this unpleasant subject, about which we must all learn as much as we can no matter how distasteful it may be, is to be "sold" to the average movie theater is going to prove a real poser.

The picture is to be a first-person story attempting to explain in simple terms just what the bomb can mean and how secrecy surrounding it can be singularly myopic, which is the strong point of Dr. Bradley's book. Already a good deal of film has been assembled by Lorentz and one hopes the film won't be too long in following the book club's wide distribution.

A CALLER complains of the troubles he's had in getting "Ice-Capades" tickets at the Fairway, 1328 G st., and his beef is worth passing along to the Uline Arena box office . . . Although the sports shop doesn't close till 45 minutes later, the ice show ticket sales close at 4:45, which makes it tough for a working man to buy his pasteboards. It gets you down to enter the store only to find they won't sell you tickets . . . Can't something be done about this?

THE MOVIES, already in radio up to the ears, have another gambit for the listeners . . . This latest is to start Sunday night at 8:30 over NBC-WRC, a program put on by the Screen Directors Guild . . . Each program will be introduced by a prominent director, who will tell why the story you are about to hear was his favorite film . . . Opener will be "Stagecoach," with John Ford telling you about his memorable triumph . . . The acting cast will be headed by John Wayne.

ANTA, as you've already been told, is in radio in a big way and the program's reviews in the trade press have been fine . . . This half hour by the American National Theater and Academy is heard Thursday nights on WMAL at 7:30, "Theater U. S. A.," as part of the Army-Air Force recruiting service.

THE NATIONAL has a sudden switch of bookings, bringing in "Mourning Becomes Electra" next Wednesday matinee . . . This is the Eugene O'Neill drama adapted to the screen by Dudley Nichols, with Rosalind Russell, Raymond Massey, Michael Redgrave and Katina Paxinou . . . The three-play film has been a long time reaching here; after its first showings the three-hour running was cut down by about a third and this is the version which RKO will present here next week . . . And that will mean three RKO films of the most ambitious nature playing or imminent here—the Trans-Lux' current "Enchantment," and Keith's incoming "Joan of Arc," the other two.

REVIVALS RIDE HIGH this weekend . . . The Hippodrome today begins the juciest of its month-long parade, a double-winner double bill, "I Know Where I'm Going" and "Tawny Pipit" . . . "Anna Christie" will be shown tonight at 8:30 by the Institute of Contemporary Arts, 1322 New York ave., whose phone number (not in the book) is Sterling 6266 . . . "Great Expectations" will be shown tonight at 8:30 at International Student House, 1825 R st., phone Michigan 4007.

Conzelman Quits as Coach of Chicago Cardinals

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

GEORGE WEISS, the general manager of the New York Yankees, was moved to call a press conference the other day, and Bill Veeck must be credited with an assist. At least Veeck jarred the Yankees out of their traditional smugness when he broadcast that his Indians would win the 1949 pennant by 10 games. The theme of Weiss' announcement was Have Faith in the Yankees.

POVICH

"It's a little bit early for anybody to be winning the 1949 pennant, don't you think?" Weiss told the assembled reporters. "The plight of the Yankees has been overestimated. If we had won two or three key games along the way, we would have won the pennant and then you would hear folks talking about the aging Cleveland infield instead of what's wrong with the Yankees."

Weiss went on to add that he liked the Yankees' 1949 chances and wouldn't trade his New York team, man for man, with Veeck. He said he wasn't answering Veeck, but it was apparent that he was doing exactly that no matter what he called it. The Yankee bosses rarely emerge from their ivory tower to take note of what other clubowners are saying, but that's what they did this week.

THE YANKEES are banking heavily, Weiss revealed, on Bill Dickey's ability ot develop Yogi Berra as a major league catcher. That will be Dickey's chief mission in the Yankees' training camp and it could be the toughest assignment of his long career in the majors. The enthusiasm for Berra steams from his hitting, of course, and Bucky Harris tried to capitalize on Yogi's big stick by playing him in the outfield last season.

But behind the bat, Berra is the crudest of all big league catchers and in the 1947 World Series the Dodgers all but stole his shirt which, it was reported, Yogi had tattooed on his back as a safety measure. In Dickey he will have supertutelage, but the silk purse-sow's ear anomaly still goes. Baseball men are betting that you can't make a catcher out of Berra.

The Yankees wouldn't be bothering with Berra as a catcher if they didn't need his hitting power. They have in Gus Niarhos the finest-looking rookie catcher to break into the majors in years, and previous Yankee managers would have doted on his kind when they had teams loaded with the power to carry Niarhos' light-stietking. But these Yankees can afford to overlook no chance for more hits.

THE YANKEES will be going South with the worst first-base situation in their recent memory. They acknowledged their willingness to compromise with quality when they signed the veteran Babe Young, a National League cast-off from the Giants, Reds and Cards. Weiss avers that Young's contract was too heavy for the Reds and Cards to carry, but that carries a specious ring in these days when a good ball player can command all or more than he's worth.

They're still carrying Tommy Henrich as first-base insurance, of course, but any time they move Henrich out of right field they are weakening that spot for sure. Weiss declares that one solution to his first-base problem would be to alternate his rookies, Jack Phillips and Joe Collins, against right and left-handed pitching, which always is an admission that there isn't a man around big enough for the job.

He had words of praise for the rest of his infield—George Stirnweiss, Phil Rizzuto and Bill Johnson—but the fact remains that the Yankees were desperately trying to buy Gerry Priddy for second base and Bob Dillinger for third at the recent major league meetings. Stirnweiss and Rizzuto had the worst years of their careers last season, but Weiss brushes that fact off lightly as simply "off years." Manager Casey Stengel doubtless wishes he could be sure.

WEISS ADMITS the Yankees' age is in the outfield where Joe DiMaggio will be crowding 35, Tommy Henrich will be 33 before another season starts and Charley Keller will be 33 before it finishes. DiMaggio had one of his finest seasons in 1948 despite various ailments and may be a solid player next campaign, but Keller was slow in recovering from his back operation and the Yankees had him on the market.

DiMaggio held the Yankees together most of last season to enable them to make a finish fight of it in the last week of the season despite his physical pains. He is reportedly asking $80,000 from the Yankees for next season, and Weiss might be content at that figure if he were certain DiMag was well-healed physically. For the second year in a row he has undergone operations on his heels at Johns Hopkins and the Yanks are gambling these last cuttings were successful.

The Yankees make a point of the fact that they finished only a couple of games behind Cleveland last season, but the Indians could make an even more emphatic point: They beat out the Yanks in a year when Bob Feller was sadly off form. On the reasonable assumption that Feller will have a far better season, the Yanks' task of catching the Indians appears that much rougher.

Colts Edge Central by 45-44; Tech Beaten, 44-39

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

Calvin Coolidge's Colts unexpectedly put a crimp in Central's title plans as they overcame an 11-point deficit, and nosed out the defending champion Vikings, 45-44, in the first game of an afternoon interhigh basketball double-header at the Armory yesterday.

In the second game, Wilson ran up a 17-3 lead on McKinley Tech in the first six minutes, and went on to defeat the determined Trainers, 44-39. A crowd of 1489 students watched the action-packed twin bill.

Jimmy Barrett, Ken Luxenburg and Don Eslin were the heroes of Coolidge's amazing comeback in the last 10 minutes.

With Central holding a 37-26 lead with two minutes left in the third quarter, Eslin began grabbing the rebounds and feeding the ball to Luxenburg. Ken's three field goals were instrumental in whittling Central's lead to 44-39, with 2:50 left.

In the next 80 seconds, the Colts intercepted three Central passes. Carl Hevener pitched in a layup, and Barrett dropped in two set shots, and the Colts sprinted into a 1-point lead.

Eslin took charge then, inter-

Eastern, Western Triumph Handily

Bucky Poston poured in 25 points as he led Western to a 46-39 victory over Anacostia in the first game of last night's interhigh basketball doubleheader at the Armory.

Eastern won the second game, 39-20 over Roosevelt as 2084 fans looked on.

Twenty-two of Poston's points came in the first half, but the 5-foot 11-inch Western senior missed his chance for the interhigh scoring record of 31 when he fell heavily, injuring his side early in the third quarter. He returned for only two minutes in the last quarter, and added three points.

Bucky scored the first 11 Western points, and totaled 13 in the first quarter as the Red Raiders took a 15-7 lead. He laid 'em up, hooked 'em and aimed from the corners. He couldn't miss, adding four field goals and a foul shot in the second eight-minute period, and Western was ahead at halftime, 34-19.

Western's scoring tempo slackened considerably when Poston was forced to the bench. The Raiders scored only one field goal in the third quarter, and one by Poston in the last. Western led, 41-29 at the three-quarters pole, and Anacostia was catching up at the end.

Ronnie Brooks, a 6-foot 1-inch center, led Anacostia with 15 points. The loss was Anacostia's first in two league games. It was Western's first league start.

Both second game teams showed a lack of experience, slowing down

DON ESLIN (left), Coolidge player, looks on in open-mouthed amazement as Ken Luxenburg (No. 4) of Coolidge, and Bill Dunker of Central go high into the air for the ball in yesterday's Interhigh League game at the Armory. Luxenburg got the ball, and Coolidge got the victory, 45-44. McKinley Tech was beaten, 44-39, by Wilson in the second game of the afternoon

Jimmy Coy On Reported Talks With 'Skins, Yanks

Jimmy Conzelman, head coach of the Chicago Cardinals, suddenly resigned yesterday and refused to discuss a report he would join another National Football League club.

After handing in his resignation to Mrs. Charles Bidwill, chairman of the board of the Cardinals, at Chicago, Conzelman flew to Washington. He will be a featured speaker at the annual Touchdown Club dinner tonight.

Conzelman's retirement from the Cardinals after fulfilling only one season of a two-year contract, immediately set off speculation linking him with the vacant head coaching berths of the Washington Redskins and the Boston Yankees.

The Redskins several days ago hinted they might make "an important announcement" after the Touchdown Club dinner. It was reported they were in communication with Conzelman last night.

Conzelman expressed no interest, publicly, in another coaching job, however, declaring he would now devote his full time to the St. Louis advertising agency with which he has been connected.

"I left the Cardinals because I thought I ought to park down in one locality," he said. "This matter of moving from city to city, especially when you have a teen-age boy, is pretty rough."

A New York source reported that Conzelman had been offered $50,000 a year to take the coaching job with the Yankees, who recently moved their base of operations to the Polo Grounds

Parries Query on Skin Job

Asked if he was negotiating with the Redskins, Conzelman said:

"I'm in Washington for the Touchdown Club dinner. This is the eighth year I have attended. That's all there is to it."

Conzelman in the past two seasons took his Cardinals to two Western Division titles and one league championship. Last month after winning the Western title, his team lost the play-off to the Philadelphia Eagles in snow-banked Shibe Park.

Conzelman, a former Navy boxer, professional baseball player, an accomplished pianist, and a master after-dinner speaker, just completed his sixth season as coach of the Cardinals.

The massive, shaggy-haired Conzelman, a native of St. Louis, was named professional coach of the year in 1947 after guiding his team to the National League championship.

Long regarded as one of the most entertaining banquet speakers in sports, Conzelman's commencement day address at the University of Dayton a few years ago was read into the Congressional Record and made required reading at the Military Academy at West Point.

Conzelman, who attended Washington University at St. Louis, joined the Navy in World War I. He won the middleweight boxinfi title at Great Lakes Naval Training Station.

After the war, he played and coached professional football from 1919 to 1928 with the Decatur, Ill., Rock Island, Ill., Milwaukee, Detroit and Providence, R. I., entries in the National League.

In between, Conzelman was a catcher and manager of the Rock Island team in the Mississippi Valley Baseball League.

Hoyas Beaten, 69 to 58, by Wm. & Mary

Williamsburg, Va., Jan. 7.—William and Mary's basketball team remained unbeaten at home, turning back Georgetown, 69-58, here tonight.

The Indians, who have lost only to Villanova and Seton Hall in 12 starts, dropped the Hoyas' mark to .500 with three victories and three defeats.

The game was waged on even terms until the last 10 minutes when the winners pulled away. Big Chet Giermak, the Indians' high-scoring center, led his club in point-making with 21 points while Forward Charley Sokol was right behind with 18.

High man for the night, though, was Georgetown's sharp-shooting Tomy O'Keefe who bagged ten field goals and two free throws for 22. Soph Johnny Mazziotta scored 12 and Captain Ray Corley 14 for the Hoyas.

Georgetown tied the Indians with 24 field goals but cost itself the game by commiting 27 personals. The home club converted 21 of its 32 foul atempts while Georgetown dropped ten to fifteen.

The Hoyas meet the University of Richmond tomorrow night.

Caps, Jets Meet Tonight At Uline's

Up to their backboards in victory streaks of one sort or another until last Wednesday, the Caps take the floor at Uline Arena tonight hopeful to end the three-game skein owned by the Indianapolis Jets.

The locals were separated from their over-all 15-game streak by these same Jets last month and only Wednesday Baltimore's Bullets ended Washington's 17-game home court success.

The revamped Indianians have been making a lot of noise the past 10 days. They started off by trouncing the New York Knickerbockers, drubbing the Boston Celts and then knocking Rochester out of the Western Division lead.

New additions to the Jets include Carlisle Towery, Ralph Hamilton and Walt Kirk, who were obtained from Fort Wayne for Bruce Hale, who started out as the Jets player-coach. From Rochester, the Jets acquired Lionel Malmed, former NYU luminary, and Philadelphia sent Roy Pugh to bolster the club.

Andy Kostecka, the Georgetown star last year, is still another who sees much action for Indianapolis.

Coach Red Auerbach plans no changes in the Cap club which has won 24 of its first 29 games. The usual array of Bones McKinney, Bob Feerick, Kleggie Hermsen, Freddie Scolari and Sonny Hertzberg will do most of the playing although McKinney has been down with a cold.

Harrison's 69 Paces Open; Hogan 5 Strokes Off Pace

Los Angeles, Jan. 7 (U.P.).—E. J. (Dutch) Harrison of Little Rock, Ark., jumped into the lead in the $15,000 Los Angeles Open golf tournament today with a two-under-par 69 over the difficult Riviera Country Club course.

He was one of only four shotmakers to break par in the first day's play of the 72-hole tournament.

Ben Hogan of Fort Worth, Tex., the favorite, found the going tough on his first day of tournament play in more than two months and wound up with a three-over-par 74.

The three others who cracked par in opening-round play included a 25-year-old college student—Bob Gardner, former captain of the University of California at Los Angeles golf team.

Gardner, a Burbank, Calif., Navy veteran, fired a 33, 35—70 to become the first finisher to scoot under par. He was joined later by Nick Petropolo of Culver City, Calif., also with a 35-35 and Jimmy Demarest of Ojai, Calif., with the same score.

Eight first-round scores wound up at par 71. Bracketed in the group were Marty Furgol, Bob Toski, Sam Snead, Ellsworth Vines, Smiley Quick, Jimmy Hines, Jack Burke and Eric Monti.

Fifteen finished in the 72 bracket, including Los Angeles Bill Spiller, Mangrum, Herman Keiser, George Fazo, Ed (Porky) Oliver, Hawaiian Jimmy Ukauka, Harry Bassler and Jerry Barber.

Others in this bracket were Jack R. Cage, Felice Torza, Bill Nary, Bruce McCormick, Chick Harbert, Earl Martin and George Beer.

Other name golfers who finished even farther down the ladder included Toney Penna with a 76, Jimmy Thomson and Willie Hunter with 77s, Jim Milward, Bud Ward and Vic Ghezzi with 87s, and Harold (Jug) McSpaden with an 81.

Worsham 6 StrokesBack

Los Angeles, Jan. 7.—Lew Worsham of Washington, D. C., was six strokes off the pace and four over par in the first round of the Los Angeles Open today.

Belloise Wins By Decision

New York, Jan. 7 (AP).—Rugged Steve Belloise, veteran Bronx middleweight, slugged out a unanimous 10-round decision over Robert Villemain, a 100 per cent game Frenchman making his American debut, tonight in blood-spattered Madison Square Garden ring.

The fighters drew a tremendous ovation from the big crowd at the finish. Belloise weighed 157½, Villemain 159¾.

The stocky little Frenchman, bleeding freely from cuts around both eyes, made a smashing hit with the turnout of 11,863 who paid $35,968 for the first Garden show of the new year.

Referee Eddie Joseph had it close, 6-4 in favor of Belloise. Judge Harold Barnes had it Belloise 7-2 with one even and Judge Art Aidella had it Belloise 7-3. The AP score card found for the baldish Bronxite 8-1, with one even.

There were no knockdowns in the furious battle that was much more exciting than the unanimous vote would indicate. Belloise threw the harder punches but Villemain caught the fancy of the customers with his gameness.

When the squat Parisian rallied in the eighth, it sounded as though he were fighting in gay Paree instead of in Belloise's own back yard.

Towering over his French foe, Belloise was able to keep off the slow-starting Villemain in the early rounds. Time after time he scored with that long left before he was able to open up Villemain for a right-handed attack.

Louis Offered $500,000 Deal to Travel With Circus

Chicago, Jan. 7 (U.P.).—Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis has been offered a $500,000 guarantee to travel with the Dailey Brothers Circus from April 16 to November 16, his publicity man, Harry Mendel, announced today.

Mendel said that Louis wanted some time to think over the offer.

Should he accept, it appeared doubtful that he would be able to defend his title during the summer, Mendel said.

"He never said he would defend the title this summer, though," Mendel said. "Just that he would if he had a satisfactory opponent."

Louis would travel with the circus in a private car and appear twice a day in exhibition bouts.

Va. Wallops Terps, 79-43

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 7.—Maryland led Virginia in the first three minutes of tonight's ball game, but at the end the Terrapins weren't even within shouting distance.

With Center Joe Noertker dumping in 30 points, 2 shy of a Memorial Gymnasium record, the Cavaliers trounced Maryland, 79-43.

Noertker swished in 13 field goals, 2 less than the entire Maryland team. The Terps held a 4-point lead early in the tilt, but the Cavaliers tied the game at 13-13 and then wrote their own ticket.

Virginia scored 39 points in the second half against only 19 for the Terps. The loss was Maryland's seventh in nine games

Holy Cross Boxer On Danger List

The collegian dropped to his knees under that blow and, as Referee Eddie Urbec counted four, pitched on his face. He was unconscious when Dr. F. A. Weiksmer, a Massachusetts boxing commission physician, entered the ring.

At City Hospital, where his injuries were diagnosed a "concussion and a possible fracture," Mattei became semiconscious.

Gonzaga, Cadets Win Loop Openers

Using a total of 16 players, Gonzaga High romped to a 47-20 victory over DeMatha last night in the Metropolitan Catholic League basketball opener at American University gym.

The second game of a doubleheader pitted St. John's against St. Anthony's.

Pacing Gonzaga's torrid attack, which sent the Purple into a 25-9 halftime lead, was Center Mike Nolan with 17 points. Nolan and Maurice Murphy controlled the rebounds off both boards throughout their stay in the game.

In the second game played before the capacity crowd of 1500, St. John's made its league bow successful and ran its unbeaten streak to four, defeating St. Anthony's, 55-24.

Don Kokes was high for the winners with 14 points and Bob McLinden, who sparkled as playmaker, was right behind with 13.

Apprentice Runs Win Total to 41

Tropical Park, Fla., Jan. 7.—Logan Batcheller, sensational apprentice who's leading all riders here with 41 victories, booted home both ends of the daily double today for the fourth time in 33 days of Tropical's meeting.

Today he scored with Mr. Syracuse in the first at $9.90 and a $9.80 choice, Ringador, in the second race. Together in the daily double pool, they returned $31.10.

A crowd of 8482 was on hand for today's racing and the "chalk" players were singularly silent until the featured Maneuvre Purse, the sixth event.

In that one, favored Tight Squeeze didn't have to do any maneuvering to speak of, romping in five lengths ahead of Bordeaux who, in turn, was three lengths ahead of Superwolf.

Tight Squeeze, owned by Rarco Stable and ridden by Chuck Wahler, blazed the six furlongs in 1:11 3-5. The 3-to-5 choice had failed in three previous starts here but was against tougher competition. Even under 121 pounds, he was by far the best today.

Sea Command, an eight-year-old gelding, made his first start in more than 2½ years in the feature event. The ageing bay was outrun all the way, beating one horse. Back in 1946 in New England, Sea Command was involved in a ringer case when he was run in the name of Allpuch.

the contest by their frequent wild throws.

Eastern didn't score its first field goal until 4:15 of the second quarter had elapsed, and that two-pointer, by Pete Dyer, put Eastern ahead to stay, 7-6. The game didn't turn into a runaway until the last quarter, when Eastern outscored Roosevelt, 18-3, Jim Lamon paced the winner with 10 points.

The Washington Post COMIC CARNIVAL

NEWER! It's a new Fun Package you'll be getting in The Washington Post this Sunday. Carefully selected comics have been added to bring the Post funnies up to an even higher standard. Notice the balance of interests—something for the ladies, something for the men, something for the high school gang, something for the younger kids. Look for the brand new comics: Chlorine - Our Bill - Explore Your Mind - Bodyguard - Pixie Puzzles - the new Sunday edition of Mark Trail - the accompanying Trailways strip.

BIGGER! Fifty per cent more pages. An even bigger increase in number of individual comics. Besides the seven brand new ones already listed, a lot of older favorites, squeezed out by the war-time paper shortage, are being restored: Nancy, Looie, Herby, Spooky, Little Joe, Ze General and the Sunday edition of Grin & Bear It. Go through The Post's new funnies section this Sunday and next. You'll be amazed at how much more you will be getting in the Sunday Washington Post.

BETTER! The Post has the cream of the post-war comics: Steve Canyon, Rex Morgan, Ozark Ike, Penny, Dotty, Mark Trail, The Saint, Myrtle. The good, new ideas keep turning up in The Post. And the older ones get a shot of adrenaline—look what happened when Apple Mary was transformed into Mary Worth and Chief Wahoo into Steve Roper. You can bet it's better when it's in The Post. And now the Sunday Post funnies will be better, too, with some more good new comics added. Be sure to get The Post tomorrow!

Montgomery Council Has First Caucus

County Manager Likely to Be Named Within 2 Weeks, Group Indicates

Members of the newly-elected seven-member Montgomery County Council held a day-long informal meeting yesterday, less than 24 hours after their victory at Thursday's special election.

Council members said, following the informal session, held at the home of Mrs. Ralph E. Himstead, 210 Rosemary st., Chevy Chase, the lone woman on the new council, that it was primarily "a get-together meeting."

They said, however, appointment of key officials under the new charter government was discussed as well as "problems likely to arise in the near future."

No Decisions Made

Thomas C. Kelly, Rockville lawyer and one of the seven candidates sponsored by the county charter committee, all of whom were elected, said only general problems were discussed and no decisions made.

He said, however, there appeared to be "general agreement" that the council should have a county manager immediately after it assumes office—probably within three weeks.

Asked if County Supervisor I. G. McNayr, now the county's top administrative official, would be offered the post of acting county manager, Kelly said, "That would be a resonable assumption."

McNayr has not announced his availability but it is believed he would accept. The charter authorizes up to $12,000 a year salary for the post. McNayr at present earns $7500.

Another Meeting Set

Another informal meeting will be held next week, Kelly said.

He said no official action can be taken by the council until members are sworn in. When the council will take office is not known due to indefinite legal requirements, Kelly said, however, no attempt would be made to hurry procedure.

The matter of a council president and secretary, both of which are provided for in the charter, was discussed, Mrs. Himstead disclosed. She said a subcommittee was appointed to make recommendations and predicted early action would be taken.

In another development, Norman B. Ames, president of the county charter committee said a move is under way in his group to set up machinery to assist other Maryland counties in getting similar charter "home rule" governments.

Particularly interested, he said, were some civic groups in Prince Georges County.

Broker Is Ruled Liable to Suit On Rent Charges

Real estate brokers who lease property and collect over-ceiling rents are liable to suit for the overcharges, the Municipal Court of Appeals ruled yesterday.

The decision upheld John L. Dunning of 2908 Brandywine st. nw., assistant chief of the International Press and Publications Division of the State Department. He used Randall H. Hagner & Co., Inc., as broker in an action for $400 overcharges.

The suit said that Dunning was rented a house in Georgetown for 20 months at $150 when the ceiling was $130. Hagner was the broker and the owner was Henry C. Stokes of Paoli, Pa.

In ordering the broker to stand trial, the Appeals Court said that on the record of a summary proceeding taken to the court, "it was unlawful for the broker to receive rent in excess of the ceiling even though it was received as agent for the disclosed owner."

4 New Senate Republicans To Get Posts

Mrs. Smith

Mundt

Hendrickson

Schoeppel

All four new Senate Republicans are slated for membership on the Senate District Committee, Senator Hugh Butler (R., Nebr.) said yesterday.

Butler heads the Senate Republican group which initiates the assignment of Senators to standing committees. He said the committee slate will be submitted to the Senate Republican conference Monday.

The new Republican Senators headed for the District Committee are: Andrew F. Schoeppel (R., Kans.), Mrs. Margaret Chase Smith (R., Me.), Robert C. Hendrickson (R., N. J.) and Karl E. Mundt (R., S. Dak.)

Butler would not disclose who would be the two other Republican members of the District Committee. While this question was up in the air, he said, "It is safe to assume" that the four freshman Republicans will be placed on the District Committee.

Senator Schoeppel, 54, governed Kansas through two terms during the recent war. His predecessor, Senator Arthur Capper (R., Kans.) also a former Governor of his State, was "dean" of District legislators in Congress, having served variously as chairman and for many years as a member of the Senate District Committee. Schoeppel is a lawyer, and for three years was chairman of the Kansas Corporation Commission.

Mrs. Smith served in the House from June 1940 until she entered the new Senate. Senator Mundt has served five terms in the House. Neither has served on the House District Committee. Neither took part in last year's House test votes on Washington home rule.

Mrs. Smith's recent major committee work in the House was with the Armed Services Committee, and Mundt is best known for his work on the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Mrs. Smith was a business executive before she came to the Capitol as secretary to her husband, the late Representative Clyde H. Smith (R., Me.). After his death she was elected to take his place in the House.

Mundt, 48, started his career as a schoolteacher, in Bryant, S. Dak., then became school superintendent. He was later a member of the South Dakota Fish and Game Commission. He was also engaged in farming, and in the real estate and insurance business.

Senator Hendrickson, 50, attorney and veteran of both World Wars, has served variously as majority leader and president in the New Jersey State Senate, and as State Treasurer. He was also city solicitor of Woodbury, N. J., and represented several other municipalities in Gloucester County, N. J. During his service in the State Senate he served on various commissions, including one on tax law revision.

War Widows to Meet

Maximum Term Given In Rape Case

Man Gets 10 to 30 Years When Jury Balks at Death Recommendation

The maximum prison term for rape yesterday was imposed here on Joseph L. Mason, 34, of 30 P st. ne., a laborer.

He was convicted December 21 of ravishing a 22-year-old roomer at the house. The offense took place August 25 at 8:30 a. m.

The convicting District Court jury declined to recommend the death penalty. Judge Edward M. Curran imposed sentence of 10 to 30 years prison.

According to police, Mason admitted the rape. They quoted him as saying that he had a sudden urge to possess the woman, and after gaining entrance to her room, pushed her onto her bed, and threatened to kill her.

The case was tried only after a jury was obtained with difficulty. Twenty-seven of the jury panel were eliminated because of aversion to imposing the death penalty. Anoth 27 declared they had read an editorial in The Washington Star criticizing an acquittal of a rape defendant in another case.

Harry W. Peed, 25, convicted of attempted carnal knowledge on a 7-year-old girl, was given 18 months to 6 years jail.

Allen S. Jackson, 48, of 23 Virginia ave. se., received 5 to 15 years for a yoke robbery in which a wallet and $81 were taken.

Two in Two Days

School Fires At Glen Echo Investigated

Montgomery County police last night were continuing their investigation into two mysterious fires on successive days at Clara Barton Elementary School, 7425 MacArthur blvd. The school is in the Cabin John-Glen Echo area.

Both police and Principal William B. Evans, jr., expressed a belief the two blazes confined to separate janitor closets on the school's second floor Wednesday and Thursday were started deliberately.

In both fires, the damage was negligible and the 418 pupils were evacuated in orderly fashion.

Detective Sergt. John P. Leahy and Corpl. Edward Barber conducted a day-long investigation yesterday, but did not disclose what, if anything, they learned. They said they questioned numerous students and teachers and would resume their investigation Monday.

School Supt. Edwin W. Broome also visited the school to investigate complaints by worried parents. He described the fires as "not very significant."

A sidelight occurred about 8:15 a. m. yesterday when the sirens of the Glen Echo Volunteer Fire Department sounded for a chimney fire in a home near the school. Firemen said 32 calls were received from jittery parents inquiring if the school were on fire again.

Student Art Show Opens at Silver Spring

An exhibit of student art of 11 junior and senior Montgomery County high schools was opened yesterday at the Hecht Co., store in Silver Spring, Md.

More than 60 water colors, pastels, oils and clay sculptures will be shown during store hours in the exhibit arranged by Marjorie J. Billows, county art supervisor, and her staff, and designed to illustrate the phases of art instruction offered in the school system.

Whopper About Ocean Discus Heave Wins Tall Tales Crown

Can you imagine Paul Bunyan mistaking the Atlantic Ocean for the Potomac River and hurling two wagon wheels into France in an effort to equal George Washington's dollar-tossing feat?

Harold B. Jenson of 10103 McKinney ave., Silver Spring, Md., a former Sleepy Eye, Minn., resident, imagined it and won first prize in a tall tale contest sponsored by the Brainerd, Minn., Civic Asociation, it was announced last night at the Minnesota Society's Paul Bunyan party at the Hotel Shoreham.

Jenson, who won a week's vacation for two at a Minnesota lodge in the logging country, said Bunyan, legendary hero of lumberjacks, tossed wagon wheels because he did not have a dollar, and was embarrassed when the first two of the four wheels landed in the water.

G. E. Damon, 1201 16th st. nw., and Rolland W. Stoebe, 3214 N. 19th rd., Arlington, Va., both formerly of Minneapolis, won second and third prizes in the contest.

Present for the party was Lem Costley, 6-foot 6-inch impersonator of Bunyan. Costley, from International Falls, Minn., was in full lumberjack regalia complete with a double-bladed, 18-inch (wooden) ax, and beard.

Earlier in the day he saw President Truman and, on behalf of Minnesota Gov. Luther Youngdahl, invited the President to attend Minnesota's State centennial this year.

Costley told reporters the President said "he'd be awfully pleased to come if it is possible to do so" but that it was too early to say whether he could accept.

About 800 persons attended the party, many in logging country shirts and jumpers, with the men wearing false whiskers and beaver caps. Among them were many members of the Minesota delegation in Congress.

Flanking the stage were 10-foot snow men. A 4-foot "Bunyan" potato and a grandfather's clock, with a cuckoo that cackled like a hen, stood at the ballroom entrance. The clock was said to be so old the pendulum's shadow had worn out the back of its case.

Lieut. Col. Paul A. Feyereisen was general chairman of arrangements.

W. & O. D.'s Railroad Tracks Fall Down . . .

The Washington Post

EMBANKMENT CAVES IN—A cave-in of an embankment on its tracks near Rosslyn brought back into the news yesterday the Washington & Old Dominion Railway, which has probably had more headlines than any other railroad its size in the country. Shop foreman Milton G. Riley of 4612 N. 16th st., Arlington, Va., is shown as he cuts the hanging tracks free with an acetylene torch. The tracks collapsed sometime after a passenger train arrived from Leesburg

$31 Minimum Office Worker Wage Is Urged

Figure and $29.75 For Cleaners Compare With $17, $14.50 Now

The District minimum wage conference for office and miscellaneous occupations yesterday recommended minimum weekly wages of $31 for women and minor clerical workers, elevator operators and janitors, and $29.75 for maids and cleaners.

The recommended minimum wage rates, which go to the D. C. Minimum Wage and Industrial Safety Board for approval, compare with $17 and $14.50 now in effect for these respective groups. Present rates were set in 1939.

The new rates would apply to a work week of between 32 and 40 hours for office and clerical workers, as compared with the present limitations of 30 to 44 hours. The new work week for elevator operators, janitors, maids and cleaners would be 32 to 44 hours, as compared with their present weekly limits of 40 to 43 hours.

86 Cents for Part-Time Work

Office workers, elevator operators and janitors would receive a minimum of 86 cents an hour for part-time work of less than 32 hours a week, while maids and cleaners would receive at least 78 cents an hour for such work.

The same rates would apply to overtime work and work of more than 40 hours in the case of office employes, and 44 hours in the other classifications listed.

One exception to these recommendations is that the minimum rate for students under 18 for office work of less than 32 hours would be 65 cents an hour, for nine months after issuance of a student certificate by the board. After this period, the regular 86-cent rate would apply.

The conference's definition of office workers would include such occupations as office clerk, stenographers, typists, bookkeepers, cashiers, office machine operators, office boys and girls, ushers, messengers, telephone operators, dental and medical assistants and laboratory helpers.

Other Provisions

Regulations providing for expenses of uniforms, ruling out tips as counting toward the minimum wage, and other safeguarding provisions similar to those now in effect for other occupations, are included.

Members of the conference making the recommendations were Fred C. Croxton, chairman; Mrs. Spencer Gordon and Mrs. Robert F. Leonard, representing the public; John C. McCormack, J. E. Heberle and Charles E. Phillips, representing employers, and Mrs. Mary E. Gannon, Anne Terris and Peter Henle, representing employes. Alternate members were Cecil L. Jones, Bernard J. Nees, O. H. Ritenour, Margaret Cleary and Glenn Watts.

The Minimum Wage and Industrial Safety Board will consider the proposals next week. A public hearing, required before such regulations may go into effect, will be set at that time.

Old Dominion Railroad Cave-in Leaves Tracks Hanging in Air

A cave-in yesterday dislodged several sections of the Washington & Old Dominion Railroad's westbound track near Rosslyn, leaving 200 feet of track hanging in midair and halting rail traffic to and from the line's Rosslyn terminal.

The cave-in, attributed to the collapse of a retaining wall along the 40-foot embankment opposite the 1500 block of Lee hwy., sent tons of dirt and stone hurtling into a ditch at the foot of the wall and tossed several large trees out onto the highway.

No traffic was passing at the time, police said. One lane of Lee hwy. was blocked off for more than an hour after the cave-in.

Closed to Regular Traffic

The wall collapsed about 11 a. m. about 3½ hours after the line's single commuter train from Leesburg, Va., had passed on the eastbound track.

The part of the embankment supporting the eastbound track was left intact, but company officials said the undamaged track would be closed to regular traffic until the bank has been reinforced.

Late yesterday, crewmen eased the pasenger train over the undamaged track to a point just west of the break, where it was switched to the westbound track. Commuters returning to Leesburg last night were driven in private automobiles from the station to the waiting train, about a quarter of a mile distant.

The cave-in tied up two freight trains, one scheduled to go out from the Rosslyn terminal and the other en route to Rosslyn from Purcellville, Va.

Two scheduled mail runs from Purcellville were made despite the collapse. The trains were brought to a point just west of the damaged line, where their cargo was unloaded and taken into the station by truck.

Crew Ordered Away

According to T. C. Dorsey, superintendent of the railroad, a crew of laborers was working at the base of the wall about half an hour before it collapsed, but was ordered to safety when Dorsey noticed several trees atop the embankment "trembling and shifting."

Cause of the cave-in was not immediately determined, but Dorsey said he believed it was due to recent heavy rains coupled with "general deterioration" of the retaining wall, built in 1906.

A possible contributing factor, Dorsey said, may have been blasting operations at the nearby George Washington Memorial Parkway along the Potomac.

Company officials said they hoped to reinforce the embankment with piling today, to pave the way for a return to normal operations.

Gas Ignited When Shovel Breaks Main

Thomas Clark, 48, of Wheaton Md., a mechanical shovel operator, escaped serious injury yesterday when his shovel broke a gas main in Silver Spring and the gas ignited.

Clark suffered minor burns about the face and hands and was treated at the scene—the 500 block of Sterling rd.—by the Silver Spring rescue squad.

The gas main was broken by the scoop of his shovel, Clark said later, and the gas apparently became ignited from a fire about 10 feet away.

The shovel was working on a storm sewer project, and the fire had been built to dry out sand to be used for concrete.

Clark was credited with saving the $16,000 shovel. Although burned before he leaped from the shovel, he returned to it and moved it from the flame area.

Washington Gas Light Co. said there was no interruption in gas service to the area.

Medal of Merit Presented to Dr. Noyes, Chemist

Dr. W. Albert Noyes, jr., head of the chemistry department of the University of Rochester, last night received the President's Medal of Merit at a dinner in the Carlton Hotel.

Maj. Gen. Alden H. Waitt, chief of the Chemical Corps of the Army, made the presentation. Dr. Noyes is now chairman of the Chemical Warfare Committee of the Research and Development Board, Department of National Defense.

During the war, Dr. Noyes served with the National Defense Research Committee, supervising chemical warfare research at more than 20 universities and industrial concerns. He was also war chairman of the Joint British-United States Project Coordination Staff.

Civic Group Would Change Recreation Act

The Federation of Civic Associations last night voted to petition Congress to amend the District Recreation Act to eliminate "discrimination and segregation" on playgrounds controlled by the District Recreation Board.

The federation met at Garnet-Patterson Junior High School, 10th and U sts nw.

Its action, decided upon unanimously, followed a prolonged discussion in which about 35 of the approximately 50 delegates present participated.

The group, during the meeting, rescinded a resolution adopted at its November meeting asking Congress to abolish the District Recreation Board and place its functions under the District Board of Education.

During last night's discussion, it was argued that the Board of Education is already overworked and the Recreation Board is doing "a good job except for its segregation policy."

The federation commended the stand of William D. Nixon, former chairman of its housing committee, who said Washington Negroes were being forced "into ghettos" and took exception to the remark of Maj. Gen. U. S. Grant 3d, that Nixon represented "a small group of misled and misguided Negroes."

The organization also went on record as commending President Truman on his recent state of the Union message to Congress.

Officer Fined $40 in Short Dog Tally Case

Nose Count in Area Given as 15, Where Later Total Hit 95

Pvt. Ernest C. Smith of the Ninth Precinct was fined $40 yesterday by a Police Trial Board that found him guilty of failing to make a complete survey of dogs on his beat and of making a false statement to a superior officer.

Pvt. Smith

A $25 fine was assessed for the false-statement charge, while a $15 fine was imposed on a neglect of duty.

Pleading not guilty to both charges, Private Smith testified that he had visited all the houses on his "dog beat"—the area between East Capitol st. and Benning rd. ne., and from 21st st. to the Anacostia River.

He reported 15 names of dog owners, some of whom he had called on personally and some of whom had mailed back cards giving license and vaccination information, which he had left when residents were not at home, he said. The canvass was made between last July 24 and October 1.

Lieut. Todd O. Thoman and Corpl. Francis E. Davis testified they made a later check of the same area and turned up 95 dog owners.

Richard R. Atkinson, defense attorney, contended Smith had followed the instructions given him.

Change Requested In Navy Proposal For Target Areas

By The Associated Press

Maryland yesterday asked a partial revision in the Navy's new proposal for bombing and gunnery target areas in Chesapeake Bay.

But no one appeared flatly opposing the Navy's new request during a public hearing held during the afternoon before Washington District United States Engineers.

Only one written protest was filed—by Thomas D. Harden of Washington, who said he represented 25 boat owners out of St. Jermome's Creek, Md. He protested against any restricted areas in the bay.

Ralph C. Hammer, shellfish culturist, Department of Tidewater Fishers of the State of Maryland, requested that a proposed target which would be at Cedar Point, be moved three quarters of a mile eastward into the bay.

The request was turned over to the Navy by the engineers for study and reply.

Phone Calls Used to Show Keleher Still Has Money

Wife's Attorney In Divorce Action Claims Defendant Is Gaming Operator

Counsel for Mrs. Anna T. Keleher, who seeks a limited divorce from once-convicted gambler John B. Keleher, yesterday introduced scores of long distance phone call records as evidence that he "is still operating and has considerable funds."

The records, subpenaed from the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co., were submitted to show that dapper, 67-year-old Keleher is able to provide for his estranged wife in the manner to which she has been accustomed.

Yesterday Mrs. Keleher, 50, appeared for the trial's fifth day in a $7500 platinum mink stole—fourth fur coat she has worn since the trial began.

Offered in Evidence

Her attorney, James J. Laughlin, offered in evidence a telephone company "service card," which indicated that three individual business phones have been set up at 3205 Rhode Island ave. ne., Mount Rainier. The phones were listed in the name of John Nelson Warfield, whose work was described, the card showed, as "self-employed" as a "solicitor and salesman."

Then followed a long series of long distance phone call records, one by one, from or to the Mount Rainier address from locations in Texas, New Jersey, New York, Missouri, Chicago, New Hampshire and others.

Also introduced were 50-odd individual long distance records of the phone listed for Mrs. Dorothy Blake, 44, of the Dorchester House, 2480 16th st. nw.

$250,000 Suit Filed

Mrs. Keleher, who in previous testimony has charged her husband and Mrs. Blake, a divorcee, with having an affair, also has filed a $250,000 alienation of affections suit against Mrs. Blake.

Keleher is also suing his wife for limited divorce, on charges, according to his attorney, of cruelty, continuous nagging, and excessive drinking.

Of a call from Mrs. Blake's phone to a "Mrs. Freedman" in Miami Beach on last November 23, Laughlin told District Court Judge Edward Tamm: "We will show that Mr. and Mrs. Freedman are customers of the defendant in his gambling business."

Earlier yesterday, upon direction from Judge Tamm, lawyer Roy St. Lewis, one-time counsel for Mrs. Keleher, brought a "half trunk load" of papers into court which, he said, included clothing bills and other expenditures of the plaintiff.

Problem Solved

Delivery of the papers, which included many of Keleher's financial records, came after solution of a pair of problems advanced by St. Lewis, a former assistant attorney general.

St. Lewis told the court that he still considered himself Mrs. Keleher's attorney, and that, since the papers weighed more than 100 pounds," Laughlin should pay a porter or hire a truck to bring them to court. It was Laughlin's subpena that brought St. Lewis to the stand in the first place.

Judge Tamm informed St. Lewis that Mrs. Keleher had waived her rights as his client, thus permitting his testimony, and, after Laughlin objected to bringing the papers in, directed St. Lewis to do it. They were brought in in less than an hour.

Locksmith Testifies

Other testimony yesterday came from John R. McLindon, locksmith, who said that on three occasions between January 31, 1946, and April 1, 1947, he changed the "jimmy-proof" locks on the door of the Keleher apartment at Woodley Park Towers.

He said he did the work at Mrs. Keleher's request.

Edward T. Offutt, jr., real estate firm employe, testified that Keleher made $1,588 last year on an apartment building he owns at 1336 Massachusetts ave. nw.

Area News in Brief

Birth, Deaths Mix Emotions at Zoo

There was simian joy, but, alas, ursine woe, too, yesterday at the Zoo.

Life and death both had come to Washington's caged animal kingdom.

The vital statistics which touched off the gamut of emotions were these:

1. A blessed event in the iron-barred home of a smugly happy spider monkey couple.

2. The demise of two woolly little Whatsit bears, whose birth only Wednesday had shocked the zoological world.

"I really don't know what to do, laugh or cry," Zoo Director William A. Mann said.

The scrawny thirsty monkey babe was reported doing very well, spending most of its time with arms encircling its mother's neck.

Allegedly sterile parents of the late cubs were said to be bearing up well in the face of the family tragedy. As hybrids, they defied science by having offspring. It was as unnatural, Dr. Mann said, as if two mules had produced offspring.

The parents themselves never should have happened, really, zoologists say. They were the result of the first successful mating of a brown Alaskan Kodiak, Ramona, and a polar bear, Snowy, who had previously been considered sexually incompatible types.

Jury Appraises Land

A $23,372.80 price tag was placed by an Arlington condemnation jury yesterday on a 3-acre tract sought by the Arlington school board for use as a playground at Walter Reed School.

The price set by the jury was only $72.80 more than the figure suggested by an appraiser for the school board, but was more than $6000 less than the sum asked by the owner of the property, the Snell Construction Co., which had estimated the value of the plot at $29,450.

The four-man jury set the price after a four-hour hearing in the Arlington Circuit Court, during which the school board was represented by Attorney Albert Truax and the construction company by Attorney Harry Porter.

Coin-Box Telegraphy Here

Coin-box telegraphy, as the latest wrinkle in telegraphic self-service, was inaugurated here yesterday by Western Union.

A pushbutton telegraph unit equipped with a microphone and coin box was set up in the doorway of the Western Union branch office at 708 14th st. nw., it was announced by A. K. Mitchell, local superintendent.

Designed for benefit of the customer who arrives too late at night to send his message over the counter, the new device enables the public to dictate telegrams directly to the main telegraph center by merely pressing a button and talking into the microphone encased in the door.

There is no receiver to pick up and no dial to operate. After accepting the telegram, hte Western Union operator announces the cost, and the amount is then deposited in the coin box.

Two Honored as Policemen of the Month

The Washington Post

CITED—Daniel O'Kane (second from left) shakes hands with Police Pvt. Mahlon E. Pitt (left) and Corpl. Ferdinand D. Martin, both of whom saved him from a burning room. Pitt and Martin were decorated as Policemen of the Month, and Pvt. Lenard G. Kragh (right), who received the Award of Merit a year ago, was commended for his actions at the fire

Corpl. Ferdinand P. Martin and Pvt. Mahlon E. Pitts of the Third Precinct yesterday were honored as policemen of the month for November.

The two risked their lives before dawn on November 27 to save 24-year-old Donie H. O'Kane in an apartment fire at 1710 M st. nw.

Medals and certificates were presented to the policemen by Police Superintendent Robert J. Barrett in ceremonies in his office.

The Award of Merit Committee which selected the two winners commended Pvt. Lenard G. Kragh, also of the Third Precinct, for assisting other residents of the apartment building to the street. Kragh was named policeman of the month last January.

The citation said that Martin and Pitts, after locating the source of the fire in O'Kane's apartment, broke through the locked door.

"The smoke that poured out blinded them but they dropped to the floor anad crawled inside. The bed was ablaze but no one was in it.

"Then the officers made their way on all fours to the bathroom where they found the unconscious form of a man . . . They dragged him to safety."

The committee took special note that Pitts entered the blazing room despite the fact he had been burned so severely in a fire last August that he was hospitalized for eight weeks.

Potomac Pollution Survey Urged to Aid Recreation Plans

A special survey of the Potomac River to determine its degree of pollution between Key Bridge and Great Falls—where the District seeks expansion of recreation and water supply facilities—was urged yesterday.

The request that the United States Public Health Service make such a survey was approved at a meeting of the Interstate Commission on the Potomac River Basin.

At the same time, the commission which is holding its winter meeting at the Mayflower Hotel, voted to ask the Department of Agriculture to make a new survey of the entire Potomac River Basin.

Commission members said a previous pollution survey of the river basin, authorized by the Seventy-eighth Congress, was not completed.

For some time the water supply division of the Army Engineer District here has entertained hopes of augmenting this area's water supply by taking water from a point below Great Falls, in addition to the present sources above the Falls.

The river survey, commission members said, would indicate needs for that program and also shows steps required to make the stretch of river above Key Bridge available for full recreation.

At present, the Potomac between Key Bridge and Great Falls has too great a degree of industrial and human pollution to permit swimming.

The commission took the following additional actions, upon recommendation of its land committee, headed by Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, assistant District health officer:

Approved a plan to establish a "demonstration area" to show what can be accomplished through an intensive program of pollution abatement. Opequon Creek, which runs near Winchester, Va., was considered as a possible demonstration sector.

Decided to hold a special one-day meeting in April at Bedford Springs, Pa., to tie-in soil conservation programs with antipollution plans. Soil conservation district supervisors and foresters will be invited to the meeting.

The commission took no specific action on recommendations limiting the amount of waste which industrial plants dump into rivers and streams. The industrial committee urged an interchange of information among industrial firms on this topic.

Commission Director Edwin R. Cotton announced that jurisdictions comprising the commission have agreed to seek a one third increase in funds they contribute to maintain it. Represented on the commission are the District, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania and the Federal Government. At present they contribute a total of $23,300 a year to support the commission.

The commission's meeting will close today after a business session starting at 1:30 p. m.

West Warned of New Storm After Blizzard Fatal to 19

Chicago, Jan. 7 (U.P.).—A new storm headed for Montana and Wyoming today on the heels of a great Western blizzard that left 19 persons known dead and killed countless numbers of livestock.

Weather forecasters said, however, the new blow would be milder.

It was moving down from Canada to invade Montana and Wyoming late today. Colorado, hard hit in the blizzard, was expected to feel the new blow late Saturday night.

The known toll showed eight dead in Wyoming, 7 in Colorado, two in Nebraska, one in South Dakota and one in North Dakota.

State Senator William A. Carlson of Colorado assessed livestock damage at more than one million dollars in the area of Greeley alone.

Some 70 persons still were listed as missing in Nebraska.

U. S. to Study Donora Air

The Government will begin an exhaustive study of air pollution Monday at Donora, Pa., scene of the recent four-day smog disaster in which 20 persons died, surgeon general Leonard A. Scheele announced yesterday.

"I just took myself up for a test flight—and, frankly, I'm underpowered!"

Tighter Parking Rules Held 'Essential'

A tightening-up of parking prohibitions in the District is essential to the successful operation of self-contained parking facilities in new residential construction, building men warned yesterday.

The statements were made at a public hearing of the District Zoning-Parking Committee in the District Building. The group, headed by Robert O. Clouser, was formed to consider changes in zoning laws which might alleviate the parking situation.

Rufus S. Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers Association, and Julian E. Berla, architect, representing the Washington Building Congress, and H. L. Rust, jr., real estate man, said street parking would have to be further restricted to force adequate use of off-street parking space. Otherwise, they said, residents would continue to park cars along the street.

District officials have been considering whether to expand mandatory regulations requiring builders of various types of residential area structures to provide sufficient off-street parking space to meet needs of residents. Several builders have contended such a requirement would be useless since building inhabitants would use the street area instead.

The proposed regulation calls for provision of one car space for every eight efficiency units in a building and one space for every four to five apartments. Yesterday Robert O. Scholz, architect, declared the ratio should be doubled to assure complete use of the car spaces.

Louis Justement, architect, recommended starting a survey to determine which residential areas have critical parking problems, how many spaces are needed and what steps should be taken through what agencies to provide them.

The committee will meet January 28 to begin drafting recommendations for the Commissioners.

Father, 83, Dies; Kidnap Unsolved

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Jan 7 (AP).—A half-century of hoping his son would return ended today with the death of 83-year-old Albert T. Brotherton, retired railroad employe.

The unsolved disappearance of Brotherton's son, Eddie, on January 19, 1894, set off a widespread search that lasted for years. The boy never was found.

The child's parents never gave up hope Eddie would return. The mother died some years ago.

Freedom Fight Won by Noxon

Norfolk, Mass., Jan. 7 (AP).—John F. Noxon, 52, prominent Pittsfield attorney, today won a 4½-year-fight for freedom after his conviction of murdering his infant son, an idiot—and immediately began job hunting.

"I don't know what I'm going to do, but I've got to do something," he said, as he walked out of the State Prison Colony under parole made possible by two commutations, one of which saved him from electrocution.

Among the guests will be Maj. Lewis Wilson who received the Congressional Medal of Honor.

Among the first on the inaugural dance list is the Massachusetts Society dance to be held Friday, January 14, in the west ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel. Dancing will begin at 10 p. m. to the music of Dave McWilliams' Orchestra.

Besides the West Virginia Congressional Ball and Reception in the Shoreham Hotel on January 22, the society is also making plans for the State's participation in the Inaugural parade and activies on January 20.

Among the persons who will be at the State society's functions will be the new West Virginia Governor, Okey Patteson, Senator Harley M. Kilgore, Senator Matthew M. Neely, Representative Robert L. Honor guests of the evening will be Governor and Mrs. Val Peterson and the Governor's staff.

The North Carolina Society, to the last member, is buckling down to make the Inaugural Week a continuous and memorable occasion for the visting Tar Heels.

Highlighting event of the week will be the Governor Inaugural Ball given in honor of the State's new Gov. Kerr Scott and Mrs. Scott who will head North Carolina's delegation to the Inauguration. The Ball of the President's official program will be held in the "Hall of Nations" ballroom of the Washington Hotel on January 20.

The reception at which Washington North Carolinians and their guests may meet the visiting Tar Heel celebrities will be timed so that it will not conflict with special features of the President's Inaugural Ball. Facilities are being arranged whereby North Carolinians attending the Inaugural Ball may also attend the Governor Inaugural Ball in the Washington Hotel.

Due to limited ballroom space it is possible that attendance at the Governor's Inaugural Ball may be reserved for North Carolinians and their guests, depending upon the number of Tar Heels coming to Washington from North Carolina. However, the regular North Carolina January dance on January 29 will be held, as usual, in the large ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel with everyone welcome.

Further information may be obtained from John K. Slear, president of the society, 1505 House Office Building, by calling National 3120, extension 550.

Formal dress is optional and enlisted servicemen in uniform will be admitted free. For further information, call the New York State Society secretary, Miss Dorothy Gallinger, during the evening at Kenmore 5004.

For this occasion the Society will shift the scene from the Carlton Hotel and Washington to the 200-year-old City of Alexandria and Gadsby's Tavern. The event is planned as a recognition of Alexandria's bicentennial celebration.

Bicentennial officials, as well as the City of Alexandria, will be invited to meet the guests of honor, the members of Congress from Virginia, their wives and families. The tentative date for the reception is Thursday, March 31.

The Society has been advised by Governor Tuck that Virginia will take part in the District of Columbia sesquicentennial celebration in 1950 and will be officially represented by an exhibit.

The South Dakota State Society of Washington's first function of the 1949 season will be given in the Hotel 2400 on Friday evening, January 28.

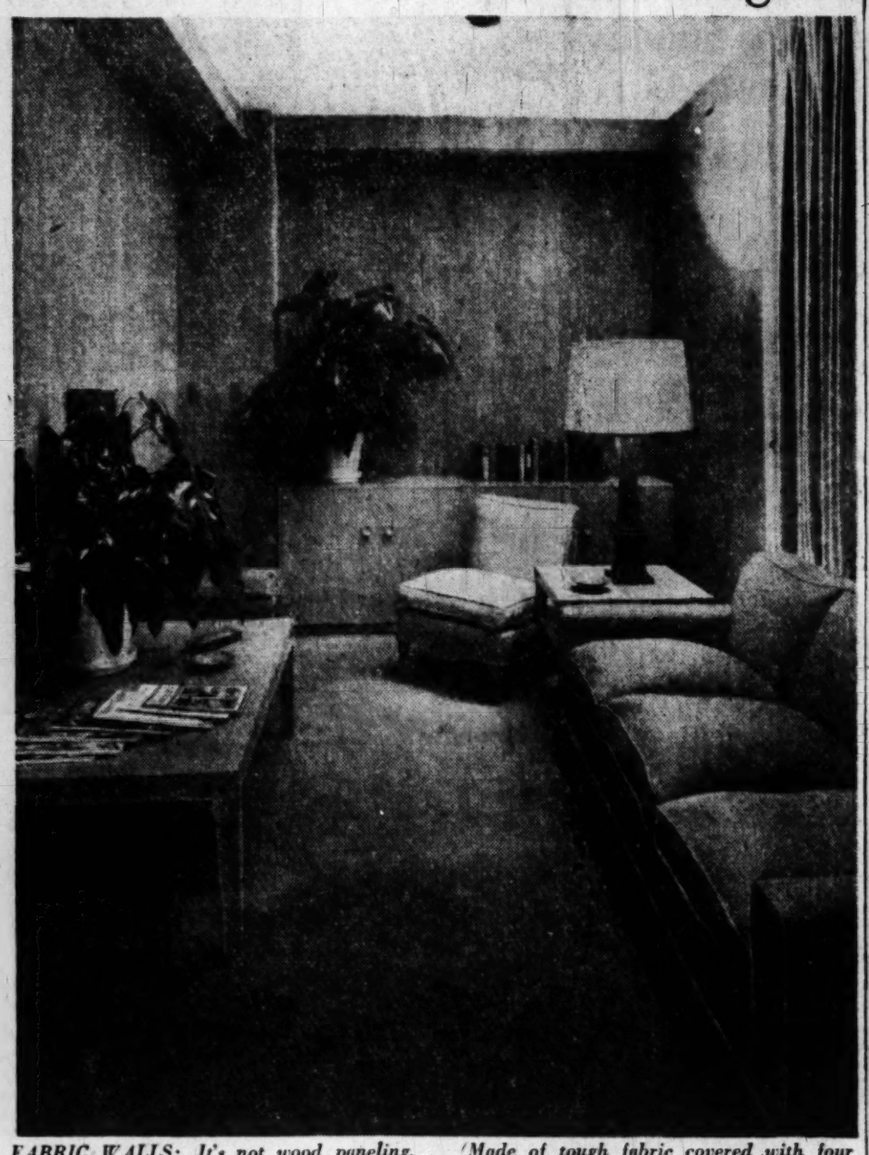
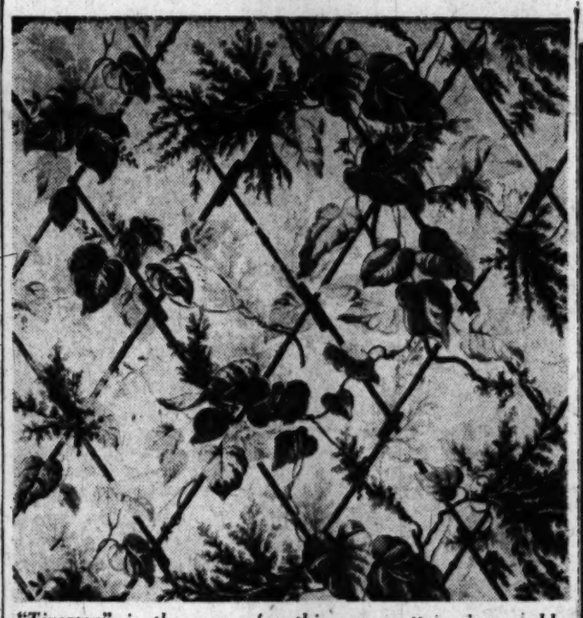
New Fabrics in Wall Coverings

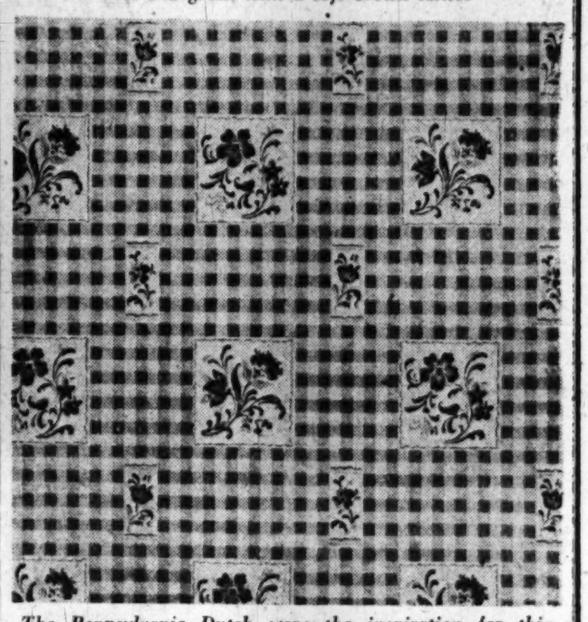


FABRIC WALLS: It's not wood paneling, but a washable fabric wall covering in wood grain pattern that forms the restful background for this small, modern sitting room. Gray walls, painted cabinets, and raw silk draperies contrast with the sofa and small occasional chair upholstered in flame-colored nubbed cotton. The tables are of blond wood.

Made of tough fabric covered with four layers of baked-on paint, the wall covering is of the same type that has been known for 40 years for its wasability and mositure-resistance in kitchens and baths. New patterns are now bringing it to other rooms of the house. It's crack-resistant, actually strengthens plaster walls, and can be cleaned with a damp cloth



"Tiverton" is the name for this new pattern in wasable fabric wall covering. It is an adaptation of an old documentary print, suited to living rooms, halls, and traditional bedrooms. It comes in gray background and tones of gray with red lattice work, or a light blue background and tones of blue and green with a soft brown lattice



The Pennsylvania Dutch were the inspiration for this fabric wall covering. The motif is in gay colors on a gingham background of red and white, blue and white, or green and white. It's attractive for a kitchen or in a quaintly furnished bedroom

Ask Anne About Refreshments to Serve at Party

My husband and I are planning on giving a party. He would like to serve mixed drinks. Could you suggest some simple refreshments that could be served later in the evening? M. J. B.

A Dutch lunch could be enjoyed at such a party. For this, set out a large tray of assorted cheeses and liverwurst. To go with it have plenty of rye bread and crisp crackers upon which to spread the cheeses. If you wish to have a more hearty menu, add a bowl of snappy potato salad or potato chips. With it, serve hot coffee and fruit cake for something sweet to end the lunch.

My husband has an almost new pair of shoes and they squeak terribly. What can I do about it?

If the squeak originates where the sole bends, it can sometimes be eliminated by driving a short shoe nail into the edges of the sole at this point. If this isn't successful, shoe repair firms remove these squeaks.

How can I remove the stain left on baby shirts and gowns by his formula of milk, water and dextri-maltose? T. R. A.

Stains which remain after the garment is washed are very difficult if not impossible to remove. However, you might try sponging them with carbon tetrachloride and then washing in mild soap and water. If this doesn't remove them, bleach by using a household bleach or sprinkling sodium perborate on the dampened stain. Allow to stand 30 minutes and wash.

I have several pairs of white nylon hose. Is there any way I could dye them to be of use to me now? T. R. A.

You could dye them by using one of the stocking dyes on the market. Follow the instructions which come with the dye you buy. Some suggest putting the unfolded stockings in a saucepan of dye and heating to just below a simmer for 15 minutes. This gives a more permanent dye job than simply rinsing the stockings in a dye bath. Frequent moving of the stockings in the dye is necessary to keep them from acquiring a streaked effect.

If stocking dyes are unobtainable in your stores, you can use regular black, dark brown or dark gray dye. If you do not wish to heat the stockings in a dye bath, you can simply put dye solution in a jar, drop in wet, freshly washed stockings and shake well. Leave the stockings in the dye, shaking jar occasionally for 20 minutes or until the shade you wish is achieved. Be sure to have the dye solution good and dark as nylon doesn't absorb dye readily. The dye placed in nylon hose by this method will have to be renewed from time to time at it will wash away.

I have a black fur rug on my living room floor, size 54 by 72 inches. Is there anything I can spray it with to keep the hair from coming out of it? N. W. B.

Sometimes the hair sheds from fur because the pelt has become stiff and dry. To improve this condition, apply an oil soap suds to it. To do this, tack the fur to a board, skin side up. Rub well with thick suds of an oil soap, taking care that there isn't enough moisture applied to soak through to the fur side. When dry, remove from the board and work the pelt between the hands to soften.

How could I get some dark grease spots off a plastic, transparent raincoat? I am afraid chemicals might ruin the material. M. D.

Rub colorless shortening into the spots to soften the grease. Let stand for 30 minutes, rubbing occasionally to thoroughly soften, and sponge with mild soap and water.

I have a mahogany desk and bookshelf unit which I would like to finish in black lacquer. I have heard that lacquering furniture is a difficult process and that it chips easily, but I prefer it to enamel because of the hard, smooth finish of lacquer. Is what I heard correct? Can you tell me how much of the present mahogany finish must be removed before applying the new finish and precisely what the steps are in lacquering furniture? I have also heard that a paint is available which gives a finish similar to lacquer. Do you know if this is so, whether it is easier to apply and where it may be bought? Also, is there any way of getting a finish similar to the lacquer finish by using enamel? L. F.

Lacquer is more difficult to apply than enamel because it dries so quickly. If applied correctly, it should not chip any more readily than enamel.

If you apply lacquer, all of the present finish down to the raw wood must be removed because lacquer acts as a remover to paint, varnish and enamel and, applied over any of them, will smear. To remove the finish, use a good commercial remover, following the directions which come with the product you buy. When the finish is gone, wipe with benzine to clean the surface and sand with fine sandpaper until satin smooth. After wiping away all the dust particles, your piece is ready for the application of the lacquer.

Some of the high-grade, quick-drying enamels give a finish with a high gloss similar to lacquer and are easier for the amateur to apply. These can be purchased where good paints are sold. To apply them, it is not necessary to remove the finish completely. Just rub it with fine sandpaper to dull any gloss which may be on the piece and wipe it thoroughly with turpentine or benzene to remove soil or wax.

Will you tell me the best way to break the shell of a fresh coconut and prepare it for grating? N. F.

Drain the milk from the coconut by forcing holes through two of the spots or eyes at the bud end, which are softer than the other part of the shell. When drained, break the shell with a heavy hammer and pry the meat away from the shell with a heavy bladed knife. When loosened, cut off brown skin and grate it. Always store unused grated coconut in the refrigerator as it is quite perishable.

Can you give me any information about a place where I might have a lovely old Paisley shawl cleaned and mended? It is a large one and is worn from age and probably moths. It will have to be rewoven in places. E. C. L.

Listed under "cleaners" in the yellow pages of the telephone book are firms which specialize in cleaning delicate fabrics. I would suggest you call several of these firms and discuss your problem with them. As for having the shawl repaired, the firms listed under "weaving and mending" in the yellow pages make a specialty of that sort of work.

Church Federation To Launch Drive

The Washington Federation of Churches will launch a drive for $73,206 at a dinner at New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, 1301 New York ave. nw., Friday at 6 p. m.

Of the total, $52,523 must be raised through churches and individuals, according to Dr. Frederick E. Reissig, executive secretary of the federation. The Community Chest and other sources are expected to provide the additional $20,683, he said.

O. Harold Folk, a member of New York Avenue Church, is general chairman of the drive, which will continue through February 4. Division chairmen are Walter K. Handy, Wilton Wallace, George B. Fraser, Elton H. Brown, sr., and Claude M. Hirst.

The federation was organized in 1920 and its headquarters are at 1751 N st. nw. More than 200 churches are members. In addition, nearly 500 ministers and church members serve on its commissions and committees.

In calling for suport of the drive the Right Rev. Angus Dun, Episcopal Bishop of Washington and president of the federation, said:

"We all face the same human needs, the need of children for Christian nurture, the need of hurt and lonely people in hospitals and institutions for pastoral care, the need of new neighborhoods for strong and well-planned churches.

"In the federation we reach out hands to help one another and join hands to meet these needs together. In doing this we grow in understanding and charity, and move toward the deeper unity to which God calls us."

Churches of Washington, working through the federation, maintain a full-time chaplain at Lorton Reformatory and Freedmen's Hospital. The new budget also calls for a chaplain-at-large to carry on ministry at local institutions.

The federation sponsors annual courses for church leaders and laymen, community religious services, work for young people, church planning programs, and daily radio broadcasts.

January 23 and 30 have been designated Federation Sundays on which the work of the federation will be presented to church people in the community.

Worshipers to Hear Of Building Plans

Plans for a $200,000 building program will be explained to the congregation of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, Connecticut ave. and Everett sts. nw., at 4 p. m. Sunday.

On Wednesday at 6:30 p. m., campaign workers will meet for dinner, then begin an intensive drive to collect the necessary $200,000 within a two-week period. They hope to be able to report the full sum raised at the annual congregational meeting on January 26.

Founded in 1843, St. Paul's was originally at 11th and H sts. nw. In 1926 the Evangelical Lutheran Church of the Epiphany merged with St. Paul's.

The first unit of the present building at Connecticut ave. and Everett st. nw. was completed in 1931, and in May of 1946 the church was able to burn the mortgage for this part of the construction.

Services and Sunday School classes have been held in the first unit, the ground floor, since 1931. Funds raised during the present campaign will be used for construction of a second unit, the first floor of the Connecticut ave. front extending back to include the nave.

Members of the church hope to have construction completed so that the new portion can be dedicated in November of this year, when the Rev. Henry W. Snyder will observe the twentieth anniversary of his pastorate at St. Paul's.

Eventually a third unit, the sanctuary and crossings, and fourth unit, a tower with chimes, will be erected.

Dr. Snyder is directing the drive assisted by Col. Lindley G. Schmidt, executive director, and Frank W. Kuehl, chairman of the finance committee.

Picked for Medal

W. H. Collins Honored by Holy Name

The Holy Name Society's Vercelli Medal for meritorious service will be awarded to William H. Collins, Washington lawyer, at ceremonies at 8 p. m. Sunday in Carroll Hall, 924 G st. nw.

The medal, which is awarded annually by the National Holy Name Society to an outstanding Catholic laymen, will be presented by the Most Rev. Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington.

Collins will be honored at a dinner in the Washington Hotel by the executive committee of Holy Name Societies of Washington Archdiocese preceding the ceremony at Carroll Hall. The Rev. Joseph M. Moran, spiritual director of the Union of Holy Name Societies of the archdiocese will preside and officers of the Holy Name sections will attend.

The Very Rev. Harry G. Graham of New York, national director of the Holy Name Society, will read the citation. Also participating in the presentation will be Archbishop O'Boyle, Father Moran, Lawrence J. McDonnell, president of the Union of Holy Name Societies in the Washington Archdiocese; Clarkson Gemmill, president of the Washington section of the union, and the Right Rev. Harry A. Quinn, spiritual director of the Baltimore Archdiocesan Union.

A native of Massachusetts, Collins has lived in Washington for 30 years. He attended Brown University, Tufts College, and Georgetown University Law School. A former assistant United States attorney for the District, he is now engaged in private law practice.

Collins has been active in Holy Name work since his graduation from Georgetown, first at Sacred Heart Parish in Washington and later at St. Michael's Parish, Silver Spring. He helped to organize the annual Holy Name parade and mass meeting on the Feast of Christ the King.

He was formery president of the Washington section of the union and is a past master of the Fourth Degree Knights of Columbus.

Rev. Lenski Takes Vacation of Month in Florida

Members of Grace Lutheran Church, 16th and Varnum sts. nw., have given Pastor Gerhard E. Lenski a month's vacation in Florida.

In addition, a member of the church has furnished funds for the pastor to take the trip. Pastor Lenski, who has been at Grace Church since 1920 will leave Tuesday and expects to return to his pulpit February 20.

During his absence the following clergymen will preach at the 11 a. m. Sunday services. January 16, Dr. Clement Granskou, president of St. Olaf College, Northfield, Minn.; January 23, Dr. Rene Meyer, pastor of St. Matthew's Lutheran Church; January 30, Grace Assistant Pastor Robert Houck; February 6, the Rev. Progress...

BUILDING TO BE RESUMED—Architect's drawing of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, Connecticut ave. and Everett st. nw., for which an intensive drive to raise $200,000 to erect the second unit of the church, the Connecticut ave. front, will begin Wednesday. At the present time only the ground floor is complete. Members hope to begin construction in the near future so that dedication of the new portion will coincide with Dr. Henry W. Snyder's celebration of his twentieth year as pastor in November

Universalist Church to Honor Drs. Van Schaick and Brooks

Dr. David van Schaick, jr., minister emeritus of the Universalist National Memorial Church, 1810 16th st. nw., will be honored this week as he begins his fiftieth year of association with the church.

Dr. van Schaick

At the same time members of the parish will pay tribute to Dr. Seth R. Brooks who is completing 10 years as minister of the church.

Both ministers will give anniversary messages during the 11 a. m. service Sunday. The celebration will come to a climax at a parish reception Monday, January 17 from 8 to 10 p. m.

Dr. van Schaick's career as a Washington clergyman began in 1900 when he came here from New York as minister of the Church of Our Father. The congregation then met at 13th and L sts. nw., but has been identified at the National Memorial parish since completion of the present building in 1930.

Dr. Van Schaick was associated with former President Herbert Hoover when, in 1915, the clergyman went to Europe as a representative of the Fockefeller Foundation War Relief Commission assisting in Belgian relief. In 1917 he returned to Europe as a lieutenant colonel in the Army to serve as Red Cross commissioner in Belgium. For his service he received the Order of Leopold from King Albert.

A close friend of Clara Barton, founder of the American Red Cross, Dr. Van Schaick officiated at her funeral in 1912.

He once served as president of the District Board of Education and president of the Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, and is a member of the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Cosmos and Monday Evening clubs. He and Mrs. Van Schaick live at 1840 Mintwood, pl., nw.

A graduate of Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., he holds honorary degrees of doctor of divinity from St. Lawrence University, doctor of medicine from the University of Liege, Belgium, and doctor of literature from Tufts College.

Dr. Brooks, who came here in 1939, has served as chairman of the Committee on Religious Life in the Nation's Capital and as a member of the citizen's advisory board for an alcoholic clinic.

Lane Is Busy During Recess Of Assembly

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 7 (AP).—With the senators and delegates of the new General Assembly session home for a long weekend, all was quiet in the Maryland State House today—on the surface.

Governor Lane spent a busy day in his office, however, as did Louis J. O'Donnell, assistant to the Governor.

In the old House chamber, where Dr. Horace E. Flack and his assistants in the department of legislative reference now have their office, a full force was at work, whipping proposed legislation into "annotated code" language.

The governor labored over the administration program to be presented during the 90-day session which got under way Wednesday.

Many of the 148 bills, introduced yesterday before the General Assembly adjourned until 8 p. m. Monday bore administration approval.

Many other keystone administration measures are still in the formative stage, including the budget, those dealing with mental hospitals, and a whole series of bills on education.

The Governor announced in his adress Thursday that he will send or deliver special messages to the Legislature on those subjects.

Weekend adjournment yesterday, instead of today, was agreed upon because the full slate of House committees had not been decided.

Senate President Byrnes (D., Baltimore, 5th) named all committees of that House before adjournment, but House Speaker Sybert (D., Howard) was able to announce assignments for two committees only—the powerful ways and means and judiciary groups.

He expects to have the other assignments in hand when the House reconvenes Monday.

Funds Lacking

Strasburg School May Be Closed

Strasburg, Va., Jan. 7 (AP).—Strasburg high and elementary school may be closed if improvements for its buildings cannot be made.

Shenandoah County School Supt. B. F. Hilton last night told the steering committee of a citizens' school association here he would be forced to take this action if the county does not move toward correcting alleged overcrowding and unsafe and unsanitary conditions in the institution.

A resolution adopted by the committee was to go to the county school board in a called meeting tonight.

The resolution read:

"Resolved, that this committee indorse and follow the suggestions of the county school superintendent and hereby petition the school board of this county to request another election on a bond issue for $200,000—or to take such other remedial action as will quickly and efficiently take care of the emergency now existing in the Strasburg school."

The resoution was adopted after Hilton said the county could do three things:

Secure signers to a petition for another election.

Request the Board of Supervisors to finance the improvements by a short-term loan with a levy sufficient to meet the cost.

Condemn and close the school.

A $200,000 referendum for construction at the school was defeated Tuesday.

Sleeveless Brides Barred

Havana, Cuba, Jan. 7 (AP).—Cardinal Manuel Arteaga y Betancourt, Archbishop of Havana, today barred sleeveless, short or low-necked dresses for brides and bridesmaids at church weddings.

Mayor Post of Takoma Park Heads Md. Municipal League

Baltimore, Jan. 7 (AP).—Mayor John C. Post of Takoma Park today was elected president of the newly formed Maryland League of Municipalities at its first convention.

Post

Unequal representation of cities in their State Legislature was one of the main topics of the day.

Donoh W. Hanks, jr., assistant director of the American Municipal Association, told the mayors, city councilmen and other city officials that it was a Nation-wide problem.

"It is one of the causes of the plight of some of our cities," he declared.

"In 20 States, over half the population live in municipalities, yet their legislatures are predominantly rural. This situation is well known and needs no elaborating. We must correct it, not only because equitable representation will help the municipalities gain solutions to their problems in the legislatures, but because it is in the American tradition and is the democratic ideal.

Named to the league's executive committee were Lloyd B. Mathias, mayor of Mount Rainier, and Henry W. Hanna, city councilman at Salisbury.

Representation in the Maryland General Assembly is a subject scheduled to come before the State Legislature in its session which began Wednesday.

Franes Run Out

THE DISTRICT LINE by Bill Gold

Maybe the Signs Should Be Changed to Read: 'Fine for Parking'

Bill Houston of 4015 71st ave., Landover Hills, Md., thinks we ought to start the new year by eliminating special parking privileges which impede the flow of traffic. He says:

"On H st. nw., at 9th, laundry trucks park at right angles to the curb, blocking two lanes of traffic.

"Oh, I know who owns 'em—but even if he had given us a winning team I'd be against it."

(Editor's note: This is one thing you can't blame on Redskin Boss Marshall. He sold the laundry several years ago.)

"On I st. nw., between 11th and 12th, the signs on the south side of the street say, 'No Parking at Any Time.' But there are always several buses parked there—sometimes double-parked. Why? And by whose permission?"

I don't know, but it's probably the same fellow who permits cars assigned to the District Commissioners to park all day in the no-parking zone on 13½ st. nw., beside the District Building.

DEPARTMENT OF PROFOUND OBSERVATION

Hender C. Schuyler of 1809 Kenyon st. nw. clips the following item from the news columns of one of our afternoon contemporaries, and we reproduce it in its entirety:

"Early American eating places were patterned after European inns, taverns and coffee houses."

District Liner Schuyler hopes that this authoritative treatise will set at rest all doubts which may have arisen on this controversial subject, and that we'll hear no more about it.

OVERHEARD

"What a guy! He's got the kind of head in which you'd expect to find microfilm."

TO BUY, OR NOT TO BUY

One of the liveliest controversies of the moment appears to be the question of buying a television set. It involves far more than the mere economics of investing several hundred dollars.

Those who say "let's buy one" feel that the children will spend more time at home, the family will spend less money at the movies, friends will be more apt to drop in to visit, and everybody will benefit from the manifold advantages of this new medium of communication.

The other school of thought contends that those who own television sets no longer live normal lives. People are forever intruding, so that they can see their favorite programs, or important special events. The housework is neglected, because there's too much competition from the video receiver.

And, worst of all, the kids never want to do their homework, because there's always an interesting program which prompts the reply, "In a minute, ma, as soon as this is over."

But video proponents offer a strong rebuttal. They point out that children were saying "In a minute, ma" long before we had television.

SUBSCRIBERS RALLY TO DEFENSE OF CARRIERS

Our recent discussion of carrier boys, good and bad, has had interesting results.

First, the original complaints brought in additional reports of laxity. All were quickly investigated by our circulation department.

Then I started getting letters of praise for the many boys who were doing their jobs well.

Like the one from the man who had been unable to find permanent lodgings, and had been served by six different carriers during the period he was moving about. In every instance the service had been excellent.

Or the one from Mrs. E. F. Polcen of 2207 Taylor st. ne., who wrote:

"Our carrier is Perry Collins. He has never missed leaving our paper one single time. And when the weather is bad, he opens the screen door and puts the paper behind it.

"My son, who is now 20, was a carrier for years, and acquired some very good habits through his work."

William D. Stephenson of 3451 Martha Custis dr., Alexandria, Va., was another who rallied to the defense of the carriers. He said:

"I'd like to put in a plug for our boy, whose name is George Meyers. He always leaves the paper in the right place, and gets it there by 7 o'clock, regardless of the weather. The Post Office Department has nothing on lads like George."

The final phase of the story developed in recent days, as I began to hear again from the subscribers whose complaints originally started this discussion.

Mrs. J. Dilmon Moreland of 4816 9th st. nw. wrote:

"I'm glad to be able to report that my paper is now being left in a dry place, and we no longer have to bake it before we read it.

"It was not my intention to be harsh in my original letter, because my son has also been a carrier, and I know what this entails.

"And I also know that carriers learn valuable lessons by serving others—lessons in promptness, courtesy, efficiency and, above all, the ability to think independently."

Similarly, Mrs. George M. Dove of 3503 Jefferson st., Hyattsville, Md., informs me that her paper is now left exactly where she asked for it to be left—under the doormat. She's pleased at the prompt action given her report, but adds:

"One hates to 'tattle' on these youngsters; yet at the same time they do need proper supervision. The supervisor was out to check up last night, and found that everything was in apple-pie order, and we are now getting a dry, readable paper.

"I'm sure that if we tell these boys what we expect of them, they'll do their best to give satisfactory service."

And that, I think, is the rub. If you tell the carrier what you want, the odds are 100 to 1 that you'll get it.

If you don't—tell us.

PERSONAL NOTES

Ernest G. Huber, 2300 Connecticut ave. nw.: Thank you very much. But tell me: Why do the Swiss put chains on their pipes? A built-in match box, I could understand. But not chains.

Jerry Strong, WINX: Am I to interpret your recent references to me as the beginning of another feud between us? Have you forgotten how ill-equipped you proved to be in our last battle of wits?

As Groucho Marx puts it: "I never forget a face, but in your case I'd be willing to make an exception."

NEW YORK.—The editors of the 1949 Information Please Almanac wrote to G. B. Shaw for permission to reprint his article in the section called "How Man Lives Under Capitalist, Socialist and Communist Governments." Shaw gave his consent,

Al Jolson told his bride about Swifty Morgan, the soldier of fortune and itinerant tie and jewelry salesman. In Miami Beach one afternoon Morgan showed Jolson a lady's watch he had just acquired. With it, of course, went a dramatic spiel about the manner in which he had acquired it—a story involving beautiful spies, codes hidden in the watch-works, etc. "It's a bargain," said Swifty, "so buy it and give it to your girl" . . . "It's a nice watch, but at the moment I have no girl," said Jolson . . . "No girl?" gasped Morgan, who then consulted a private book, and said: "Here's a number. She's nice—and you can give the watch to her."

Betty Carstairs, owner of the fabulous Whale Cay in the Bahamas, is presenting 6,000 pounds to St. John's College in Nassau, to be used to augment the salaries of its teachers and build an additional classroom for the native children. She said that this is partial repayment for the good life she's led on the islands . . . Ben Huebsch, the publisher, met George Jean Nathan, the silver-haired drama critic, and said "I used to know your father." Nathan beamed: "That's the highest compliment I've received in years" . . . Ed Streeter, author of "Dere Mabel" and vice president of the Fifth Avenue Bank, wrote his new book, "Father of the Bride," only to earn enough extra money to pay for his daughter's wedding.

The current postwar conferences reminded Herbert Bayard Swope of a session he attended after the first World War, with Lord Reading, who then was Britain's Ambassador to Paris. Swope noticed a young man behaving strangely—he'd step near the table where they were sitting, then retreat, approach again and go back. "Who is that offensive little squirt?" Swope asked . . . Lord Reading said: "Where?" . . . "Over there," said Swope. "That horrid creature" . . . "I see no one," said Lord Reading, "except my son and heir" . . . "Oh, not . . . er . . . that fine young man," said Swope. "Oh . . . well, he's disappeared now."

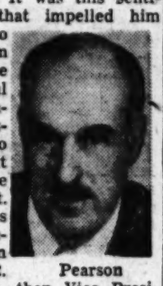
The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Truman Pays Sentimental Visit

By Drew Pearson

Beneath all the official crust Harry Truman is a deep-down sentimentalist. It was this sentimental side that impelled him to slip up to Speaker Sam Rayburn's office after the formal opening of Congress. The President wanted to relive a moment of history, close to his heart.



Pearson

The story goes back to a fateful afternoon in 1945 — April 12. Harry Truman, then Vice President, hustled over to Rayburn's back-office for a legislative huddle. A few others were called in — House Majority Leader John McCormack, Congressman Lyndon Johnson of Texas, now a Senator, Congressman Wright Patman, also of Texas, and House Parliamentarian Lewis Deschler.

It was a little after 5 o'clock before Vice President Truman showed up. A message was already waiting for him to call the White House. He took a seat, picked up the telephone. A hushed, solemn voice answered. It was Presidential Secretary Steve Early. "Come to the White House quickly and quietly," he said.

Harry Truman hurried down Pennsylvania ave. At the White House he heard the tragic news. Dazed and humble, he first tried to call Alben W. Barkley, Senate majority leader. Barkley couldn't be reached, so Truman dialed another number. This time he got an answer, and the first man to talk to the new President was — Sam Rayburn.

History Reenacted

Nearly four years later, after Presiden' Truman's reelection, he invited Rayburn to relax with him at Key West.

"Do you still have that private room up on the Hill?" was the first thing Truman asked.

"Yes," nodded the egg-bald Texan.

"Well," mused the President, "I'll drop in about 5 o'clock on the day of your inauguration."

So the day Rayburn was sworn in again as Speaker, he quietly gathered the same group into his familiar back-office. He also brought in a few special friends—Vice President Alben W. Barkley, Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson, Attorney General Tom Clark, Secretary of the Air Force W. Stuart Symington and Secretary of the Senate Les Biffle.

A few minutes before 5 o'clock, the President was whisked up to the door by his Secret Service guard. Bowed and solemn, he picked out the chair he had set in April 12, 1945. Settling into the same chair, he recalled the incident when he first became President.

Dutch Sneak Attack

One thing that burnt up the American people at the time the Japs attacked Pearl Harbor was the way Ambassador Kurusu was kept in Washington pretending to negotiate right up to December 7.

Though it's supposed to be a diplomatic secret, the unpleasant truth is that the Dutch pulled somewhat the same strategy before they attacked the Indonesian Republic.

On December 14, four days before the Dutch sneak attack, Dutch Ambassador van Kleffens handed the State Department a pious-sounding note indicating that it just loved the Indonesian Republic and wanted to make the magnanimous gesture of allowing American textiles to be shipped to the republic, despite the fact that Dutch ships hitherto had enforced a blockade.

Actually, at that very time the Dutch already knew they were going to make a most unhumanitarian attack and had piled up American materials to be ready for it.

Text of Note

This column has been able to obtain a copy of the hitherto confidential note—and it didn't come from either Hiss or Chambers. The note stated:

"The Netherlands Ambassador presents his compliments to the Honorable Acting Secretary of State and has the honor to refer to the conference on October 7, 1948, at which were present Messrs. Nolting, Lacey of the Department of State, Messrs. Zimmerman and Soemitro, with regard to the shipment of textiles to the Republic of Indonesia as well as the memorandum of October 20 submitted by Mr. Zimmerman to the Department of State.

"The Netherlands Ambassador has now been instructed to inform the Acting Secretary of State that the Government of Indonesia is prepared to cooperate with a view of implementing the transaction in question. The Government of Indonesia is willing—within the limit of the regulation now in force and with the right of taking all supervisory measures deemed necessary—to cooperate in order to have these measures carried out smoothly and efficiently."

Four days later, however, they relieved stress with a fusillade of artillery and an advance of Dutch infantry, built up chiefly through Marshall Plan aid from the United States.

No wonder the State Department, burnt up, wrote one of the most blistering notes to the Dutch since Cordell Hull blasted Ambassador Kurusu.

N. H. Senators Feud

A bitter rift has come between New Hampshire's two Republican Senators, — Styles Bridges and Charles Tobey, both good men.

Their personal feelings almost came to a head on the Senate floor the other day when Bridges was lining up to be sworn in for another six-year term. It is customary for the Senator who is taking the oath to be accompanied by his colleague from the same State.

When Bridges' name was called out he tapped Tobey on the shoulder and whispered for him to come. But Tobey didn't budge. Bridges waited a moment, then, thumping Tobey's desk, he whispered again, "Are you coming, Charlie?"

Tobey hesitated a moment, then jumped up and finished the ceremony at Bridges' side.
